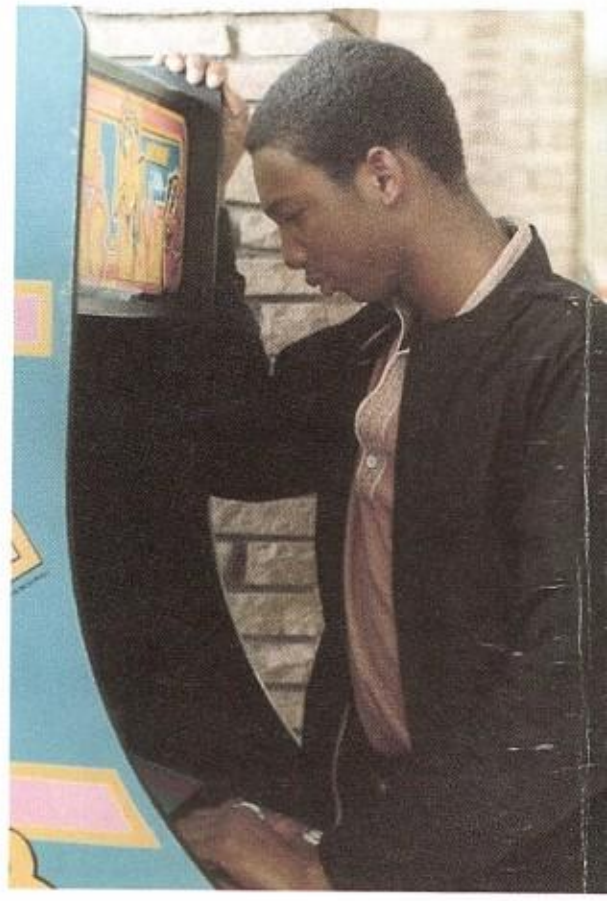
PANTHER Staff says: "Take a peek at Paschal!"

What pops into your mind when you think of Paschal? Of course, there is the school itself, but take a look inside, around, and at all the things that have to do with the school. Most importantly, there are the people: the students and the faculty. They're what makes Paschal as great as it is. But more specifically, there are the academics, the social activities, the clubs, the school spirit, the athletics, and the ordinary, every day school life. And even more specifically, there was the time the baseball team went all the way to the state finals, and the time the faculty put on a talent show. There was the day the senior girls wore roller skates to class, and the day the heater broke when it was 28 degrees outside. There were all the pep rallies, games, parties, tests, meetings, classes, and friends to make the year complete. Well, what we, The PANTHER Staff, want to give you is: a peek, a look, a glance at everything that made this year at Paschal special. We want to help you "Catch a Glimpse" of Paschal through the 1984 yearbook.



He's got Pac Man fever. Jimmy Green concentrates on playing a video game.

Lockers are a good place for Tammy McQueen and Monique Lenly to gossip.

Scrub-a-dub-dub. Sherri Turner practices to be a gas station attendant while washing a car.

Lee Scarborough, Tracy Sharpe, and Nancy Wright enjoy the outdoors with a puppy.

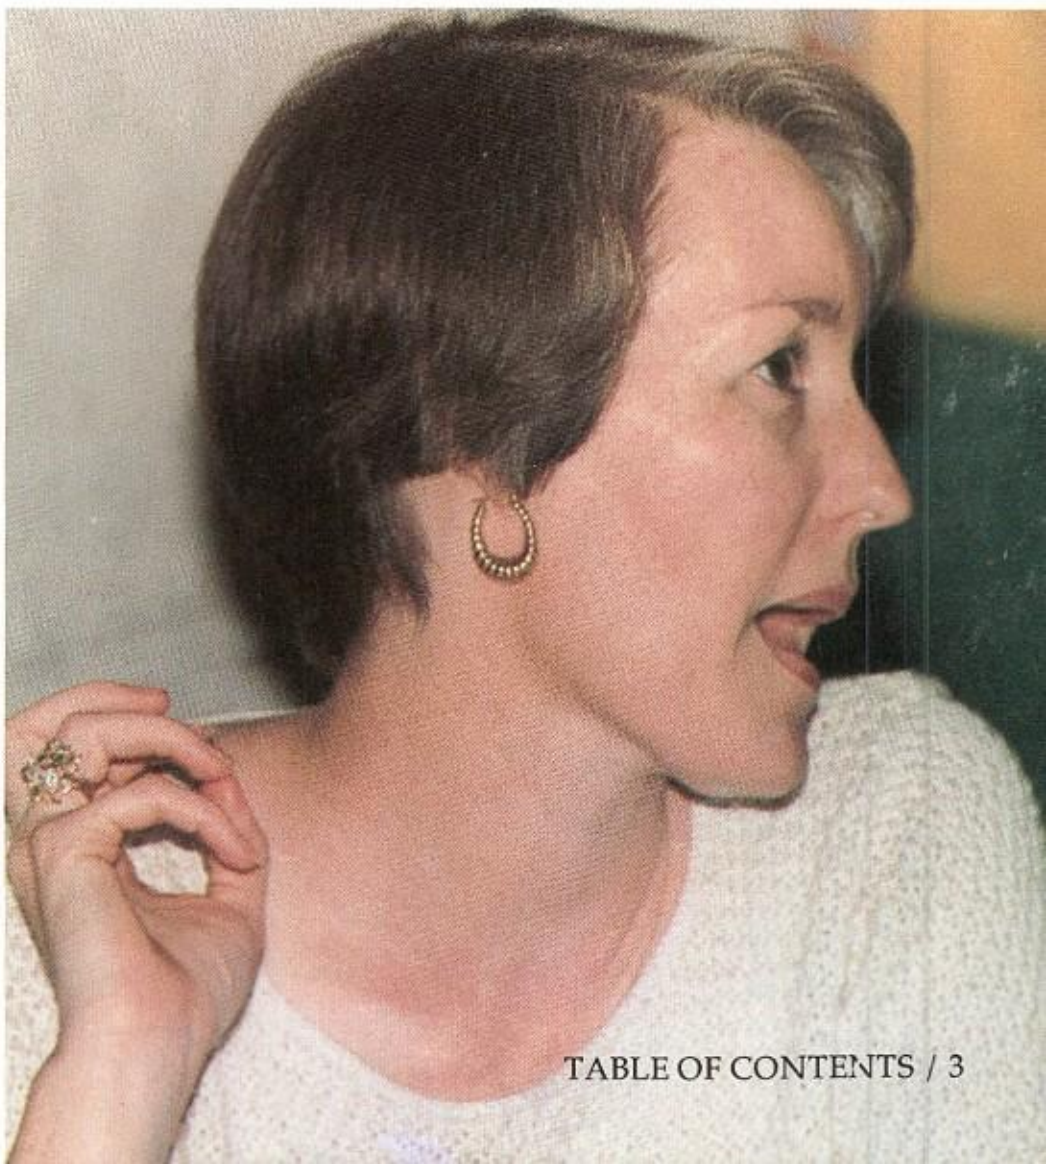
Glimpses of a great year

Natalie Scarborough and Kevin Bryant decide who she should attack with a water hose.

Lynette Valdez shows her spirit as a PAWS member.

Mrs. Judy Vick surveys the Howdy Dance crowd.

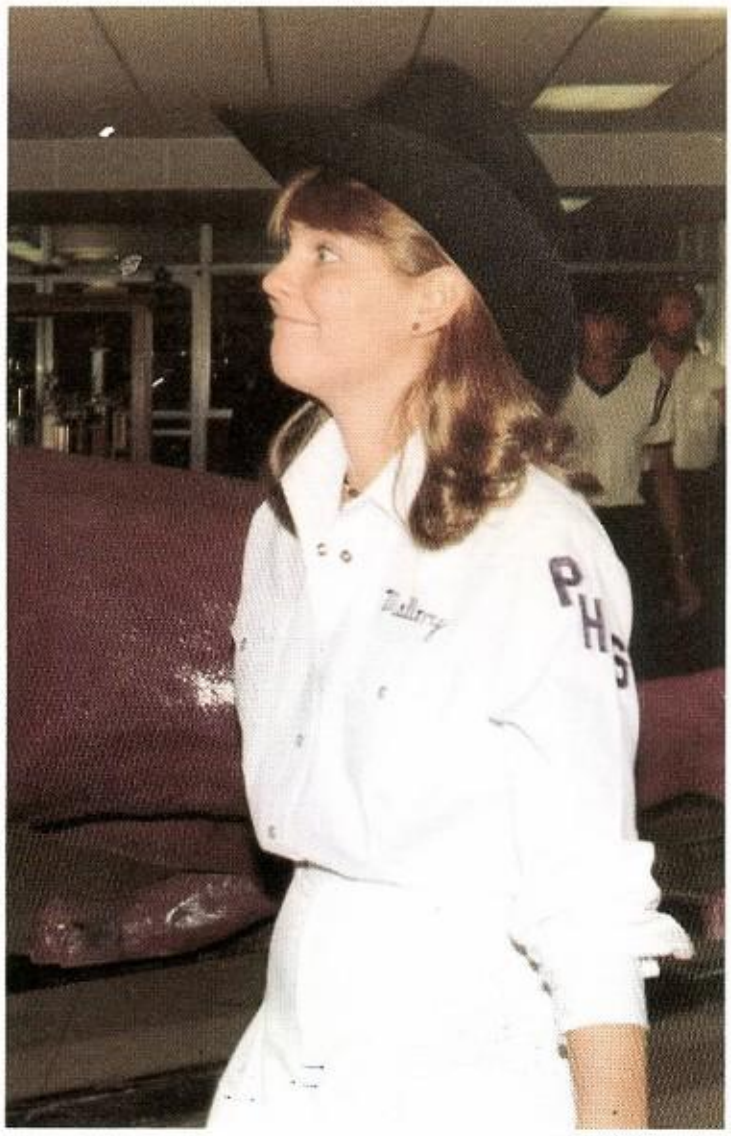


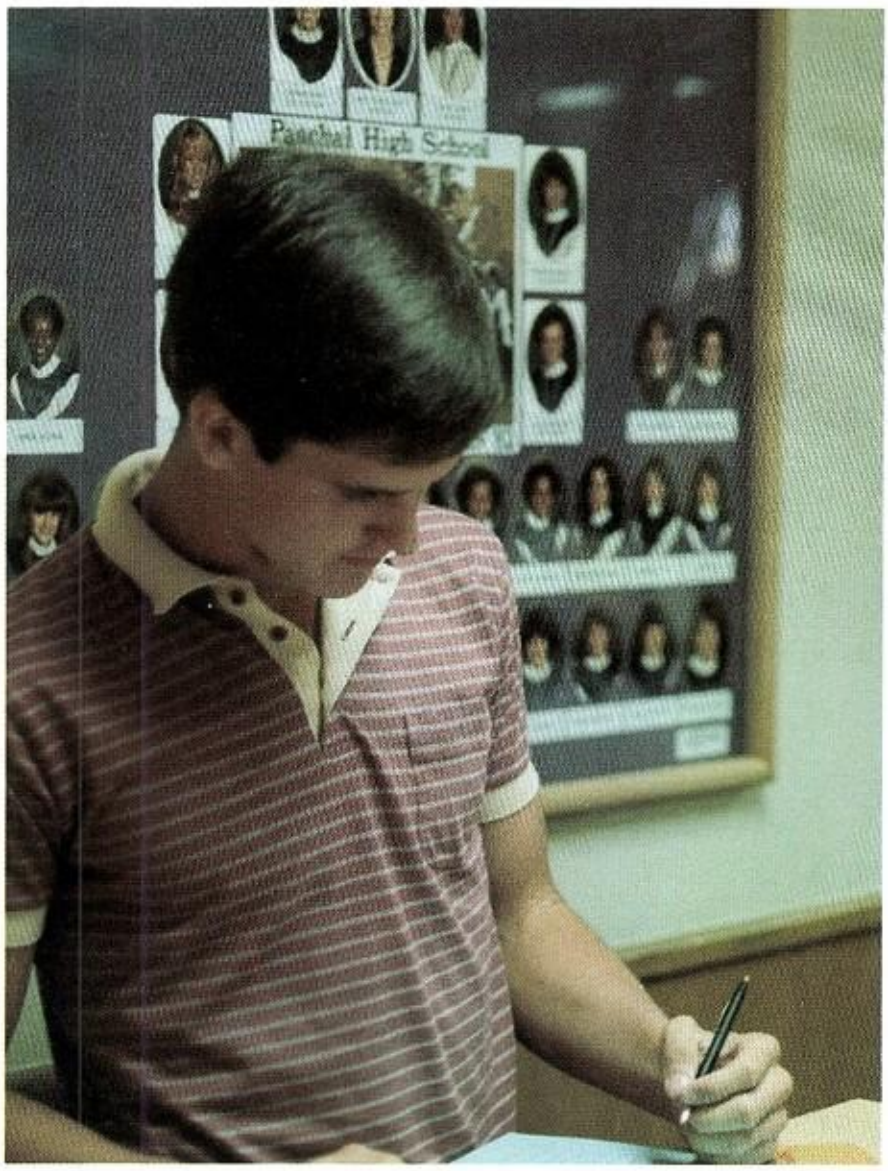
Pride: "Paschal means working to be the best"

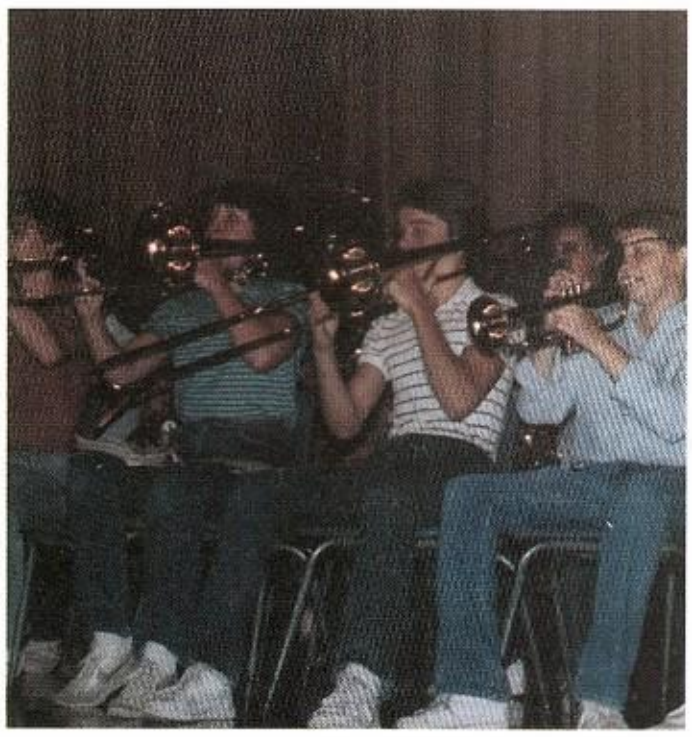
Uh ... the capital of Saskatchewan is ... Andrew Rhodes tries to answer a question in a Whiz Quiz practice while Mrs. Marjory Philp, Carter Johnston, Rich Frymire, and Earl Cox listen.

PSOP members Barbara Castillo and Holly Tillman hang a poster up in the front foyer to show their spirit.

As the freshman girl sang the Alma Mater with the other students after another victorious game, she thought to herself how wonderful it was to go to Paschal. Everyone was spirited. The student body and faculty supported the teams; the band, Spirit Steppers, PSOP, and PAWS did a great job boosting enthusiasm. She was proud of the athletic teams. When she asked some of her friends why they thought her school was superior, she learned that many of them were proud of Paschal's scholastic achievements — the Whiz Quiz, the Merit Scholars, and just the classes offered. One student said she thought it was great the way Paschalites worked together to be the best even in such things as magazine sales or the toy and blood drives. The freshman concluded that the school is great because so many people care about it. She held her head up proudly when she said, "I go to Paschal High School."







I'm such a geak! Mallory Fleming helps carry Rascal down the hall.

Melinda Cates, Ken Jones, and Joel Zoch perform at a pep rally.

Goals: "I want to be all that I can be."

Ms. Sylvia Acosta, a University of Texas representative, talks to students as Earl Whitaker looks on.

Darn, no pictures! Richard Garza picks out a book in the library.

Linda Stemple, Robin Dishman, and Phoebe Pope take a calculus test.

Sitting in the counselor's office, the senior boy was enthralled by every word the college recruiter said. This was the third representative he had heard, but he was still unsure what he was going to do. It was very terrifying to think that shortly he had to determine if he were going to college, and if so, where. Since his freshman year, he had thought about his career from time to time in order to choose the classes he wanted to take. Yet, he was still unsure if he wanted to attend college. The many work programs at Paschal had let him see how he liked having a steady job. He thought that he might even want to join the Navy or the Air Force. He realized that he needed to make up his mind soon, but he also knew that he had an unlimited number of choices. Decisions! Decisions! Decisions!

Mr. Weldon Lotspeich helps Michelle Taylor and Lisa Tracy with a chemistry lab.

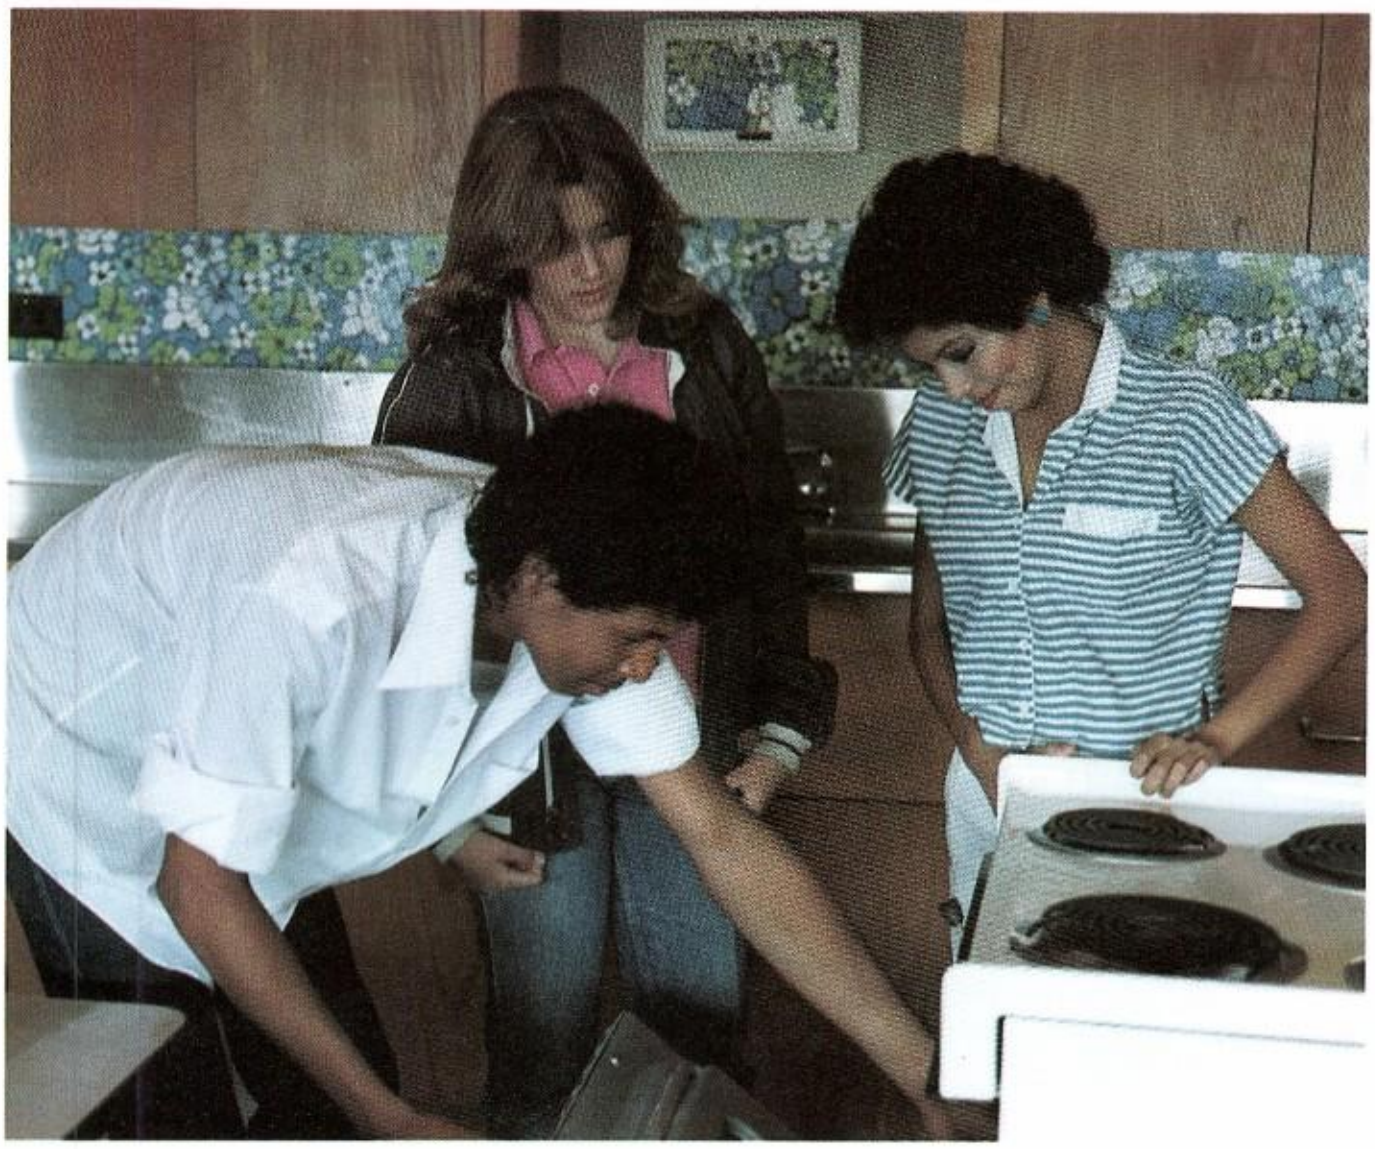
Oh, no! He burned it again! CVAE students Billy Rigmaiden, Robyn Minor, and Sally Herrera cook during class.

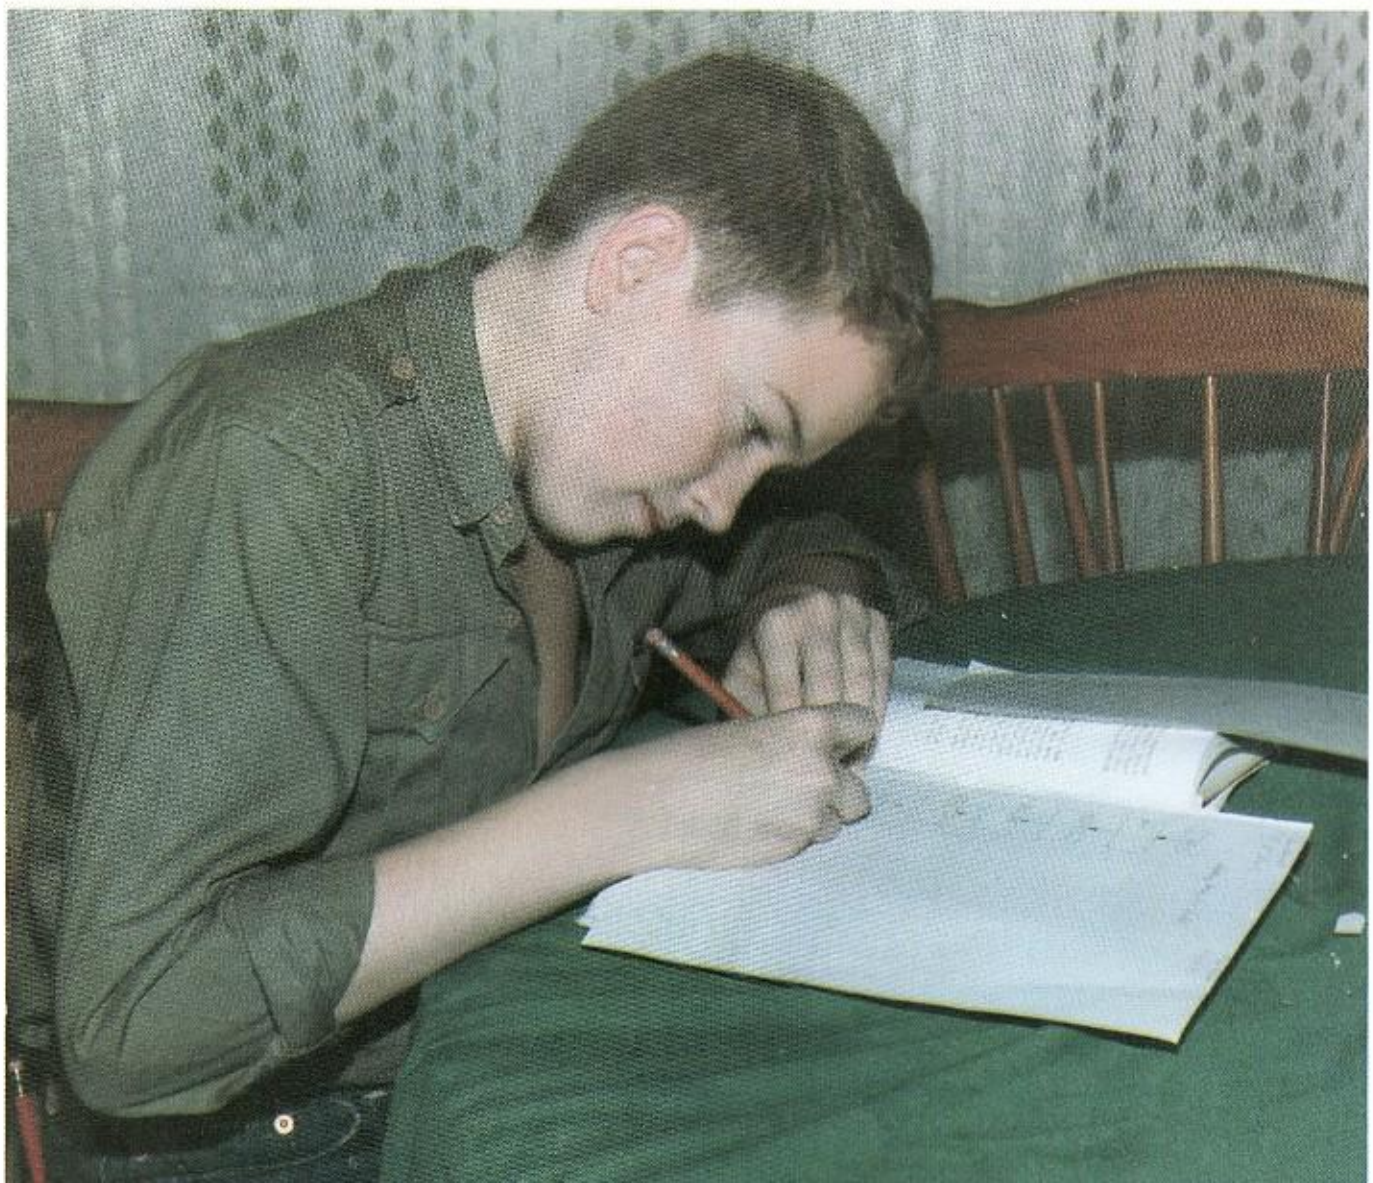


Spare time: "turn it loose"

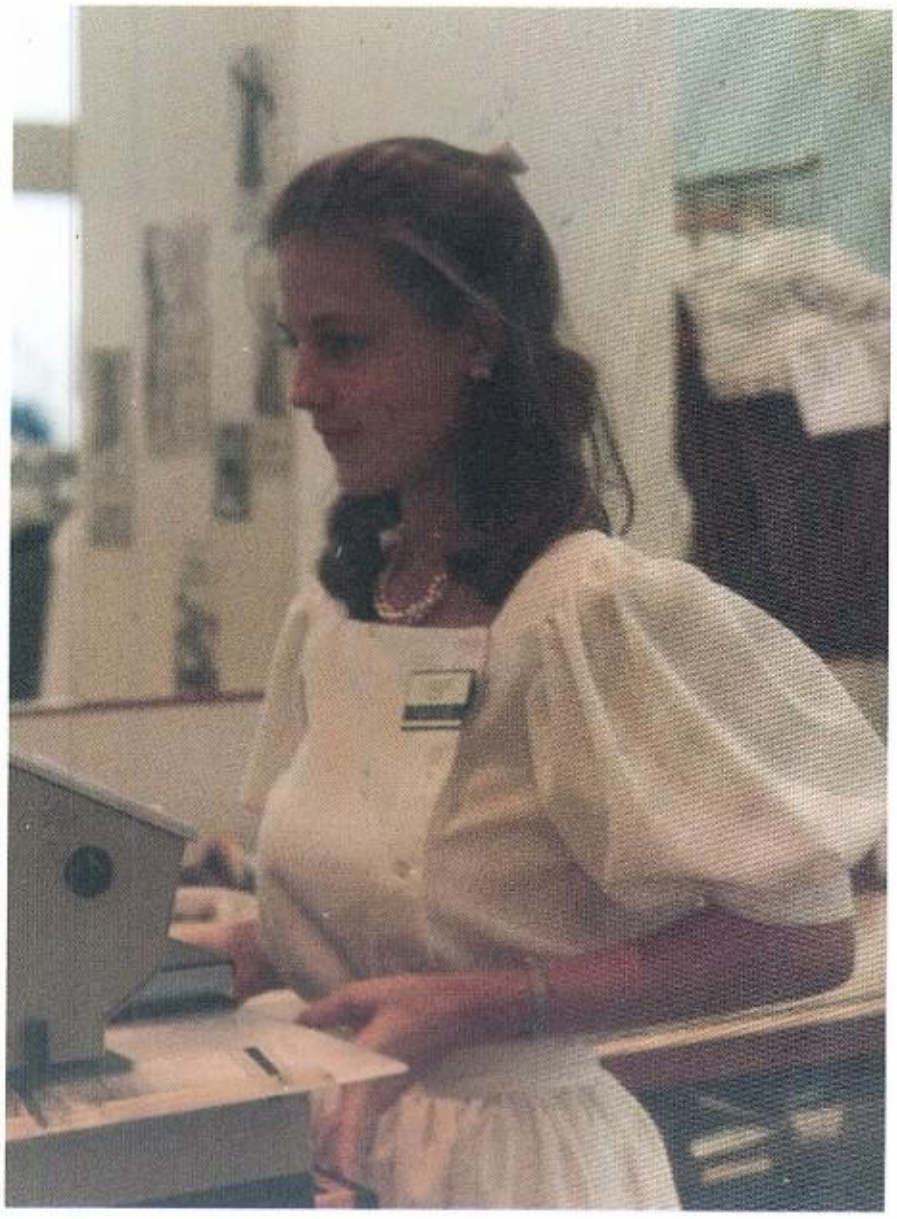
As the Friday afternoon announcements came on, he anxiously waited for the bell. He could hardly wait to get out of school, because he had a great weekend planned. As soon as he got home, he would check in with the guys to see when they were going out and what they were going to do. Once he figured out his plans, he would take a nap or maybe do his homework, then start getting ready for the night. He and the guys would probably go to Joe T.'s or Daniels, then see a movie or find a party. They would see their friends and talk about the week and whose teacher was the worst. They might even run into a few cute girls.

Of course, Saturday he would have to work, but he planned to get in one fun night before putting on his busboy uniform for the rest of the weekend. Working wasn't so bad; anyway, he needed the money for his date next weekend with that girl in his American history class. And on Sunday night at 11:00 PM, he would start working on his armloads of homework.

It's easy; you'll learn! Richard Escobedo shows Arthur Duron how to cruise the Bowie.



After a long day at school, Alan Duvall does his homework.



Suzanne Lucignani checks out a customer at a Dillard's cash register.

After school, Julie Duvall stays late to sort through the cards for undergraduate pictures.

Spending money is my favorite way to spend time. Beth Summers checks out the new Polos at Henry's.

Aren't you with Devo? Mark Jardine plays in the park with his new wave dog.

Mr. Gregg: "building on our strengths"

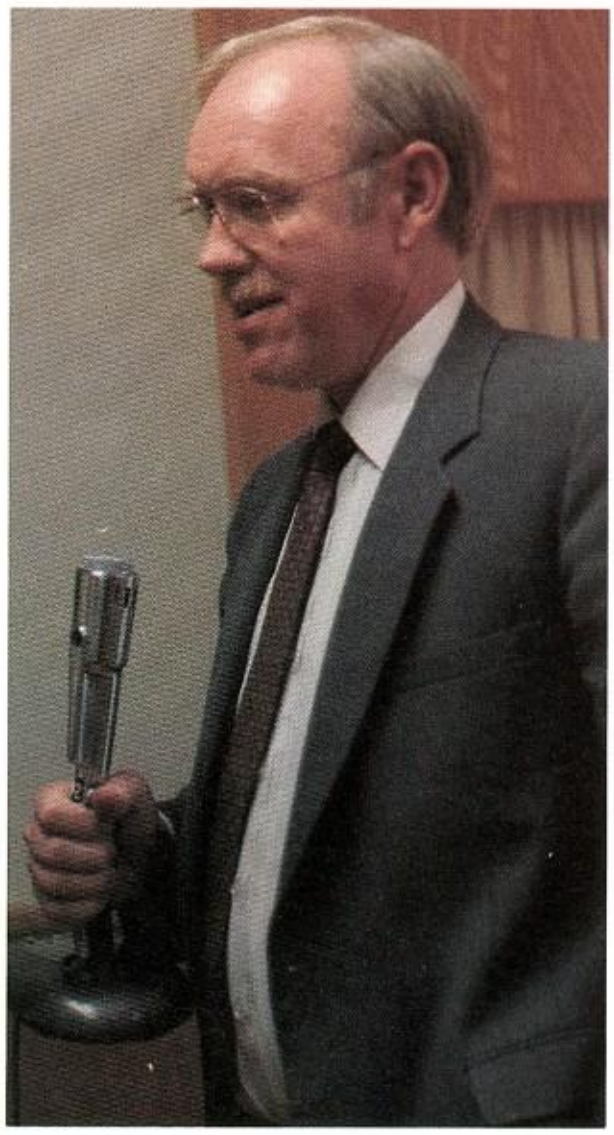
As he stepped into the building, he noticed the size of it. It was much bigger than his middle school, McLean. He had such big goals for his high school career; he was excited to see his friends from middle school all grown up, with more maturity and responsibility.

He was not just any student; he was the new principal, Mr. Radford Gregg, and his goals included providing varied programs for the students, having a quality staff, and bringing groups of students together. To do these, he intended to listen to and agree to suggestions from LC, parents, teachers, and the community whenever possible. The results would be coordination between special groups like the cheerleaders, PAWS, and PSOP; between departments such as math and science, and history and English; and happy students receiving a balanced education.

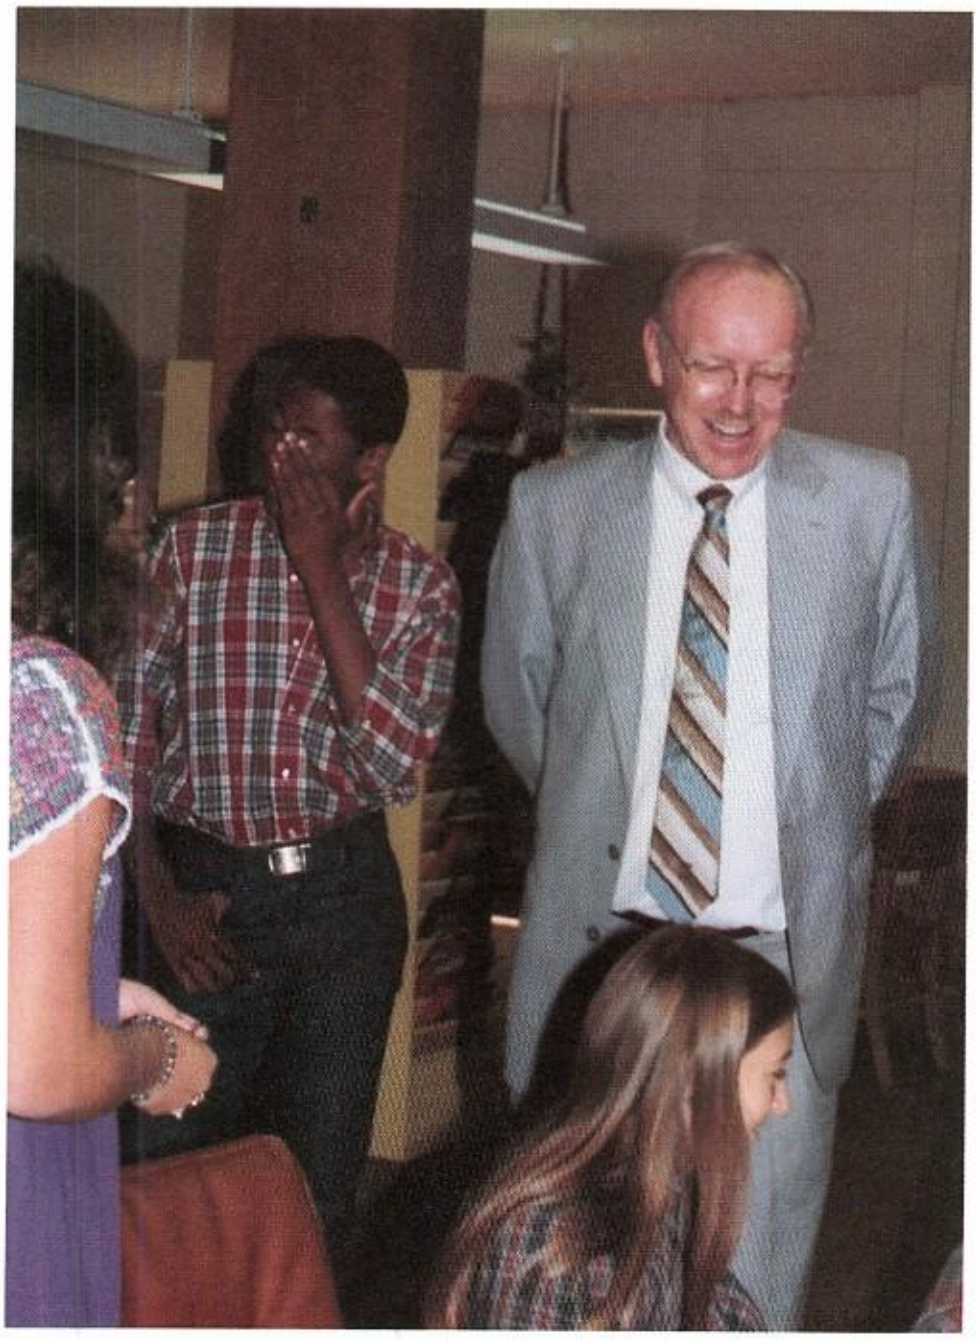
He was also looking forward to the opportunity to bring comupters into prominence in the Paschal curriculum. He wanted to go beyond learning to program them; he wanted to put them to use. His goal was for students to use the computer: as a word processor, for research, for science purposes, and as a means to get information as soon as the Star Telegram gets it, through their Startex system.

He knew his goals would be achieved; his former students and the other Paschalites had the resources at hand to accomplish anything they were capable of — which was a lot. And he had excited parents and teachers behind him.

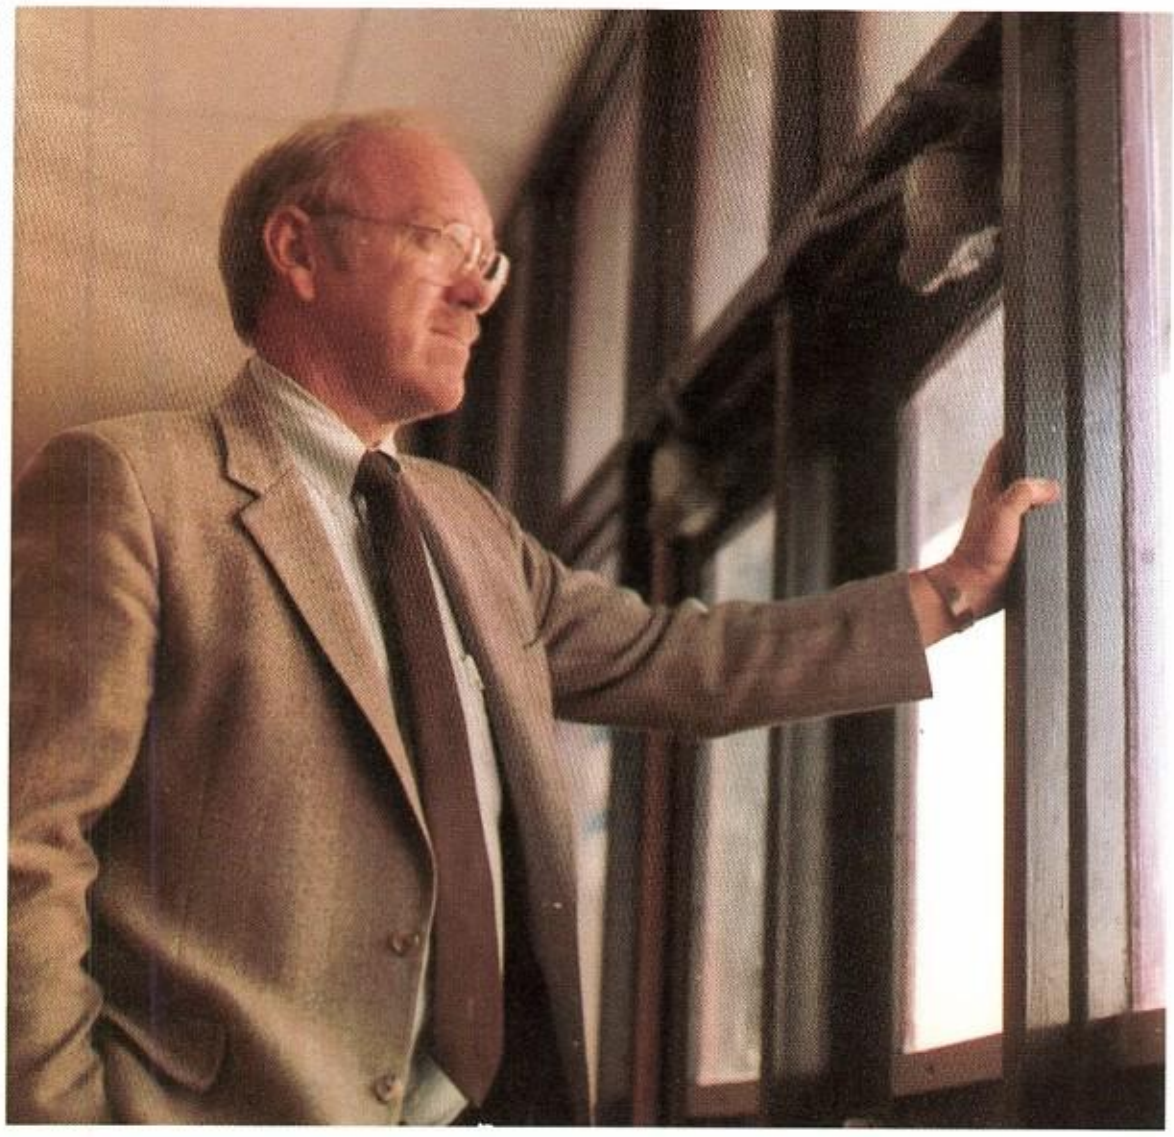
Mr. Radford Gregg, Mrs. Betty Price, PTA president, Mr. Rudy Galvan and Mr. Ted York, representatives from Marcel's Studio, were on hand as Mr. Ralph Miller's portrait was presented to the school.



Ding, ding, ding. Mr. Gregg addresses the student body during morning announcements.



Mr. Gregg, you shouldn't tell those jokes! Beth Chambers, David Hogans, and Rachel Laudenslaager joke with Mr. Gregg in the library.



Well, I think . . . Mr. Vaught and Mr. Gregg discuss counseling issues.

Lost in thought, Mr. Gregg looks out the front doors.

PANTHER

3001 Forest Park Blvd. ● Fort Worth, Texas 76110

Dear Paschalites!

What will you always remember about your high school years? I know I'll never forget the confusion I felt at registration my freshman year. This was also the year I had a date with my first big crush, made junior varsity cheerleader, and got my hardship license. Needless to say, my sophomore year was filled with games — football, volleyball, basketball, baseball! Offsetting my disappointment of not making varsity cheerleader was the excitement of becoming a junior member of the PANTHER staff. Naturally, the year was filled with lots of hard work. I learned the trials of annual staff and the pain of keeping secrets — and then the fun of seeing everybody finding out. It was also a time for forming new and important relationships. The end of the 11th grade brought the foundations for a great senior year. I made Panther Spirit of Paschal (PSOP), and the editor of the annual staff. That brings us to 1983-1984. What do I need to say about the SENIOR year? When I look at all my annuals, I remember all these good times, plus many others. I hope the 1984 PANTHER will be special for you, too.

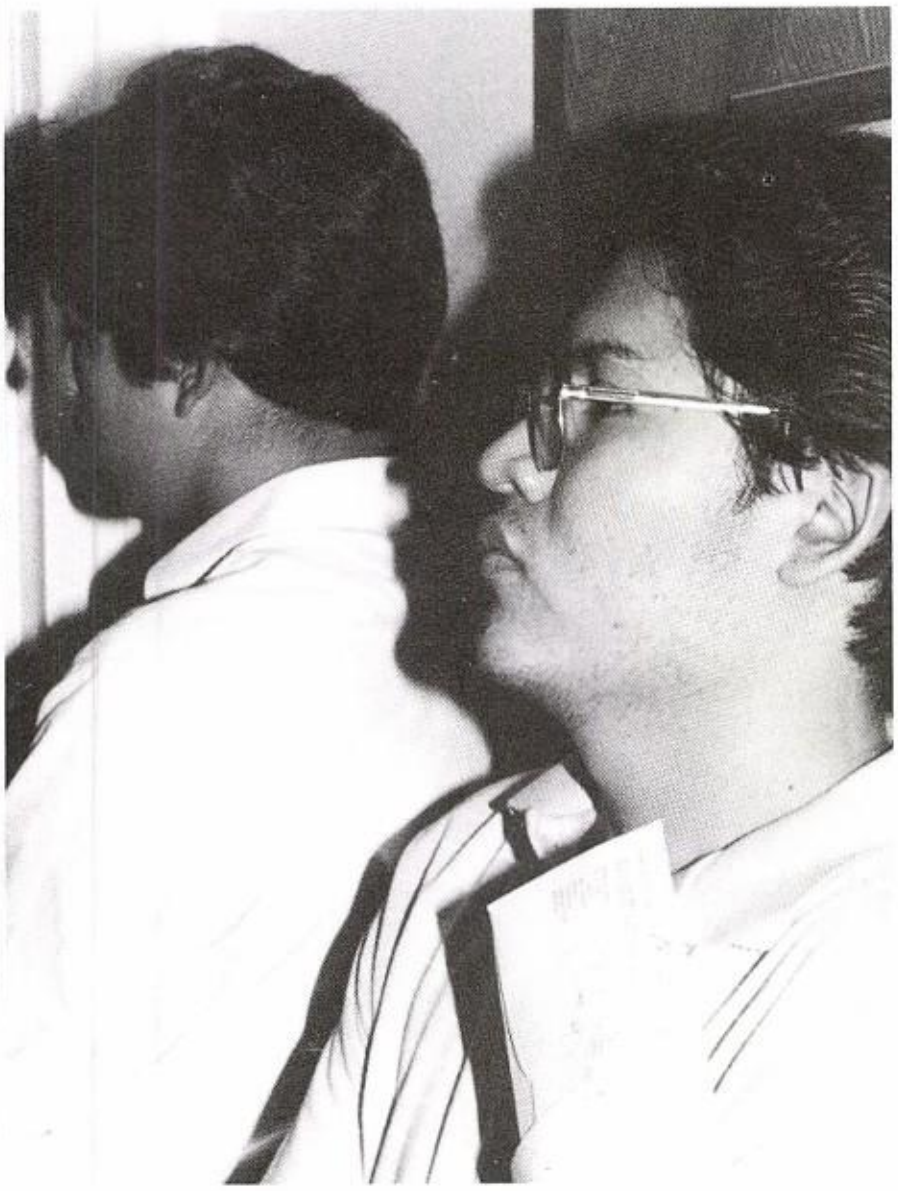
Zeronica Williams, Angelia Young and Felicia Dexter can't decide what flavor of sno-cone to buy.

Don't take my picture! My hair is a mess! Amy Custer and Cecilia Cerda try to find their way through the halls during registration.

Alvardo Juarez would love to get his schedule fixed.

Young man, you need an English class! Mrs. Major tries to keep everything in order during registration.

Tim Ezell rushes to his new classes.



Registration — frustration

Computer creates conflicts for students

"Gosh, can you believe how fast this summer went?"

"Yea, I know. It seems like just the other day we said hello to summer. Look at us now. We're all registered and school is less than a week away!"

"It's hard to believe. By the way, how did your classes turn out?"

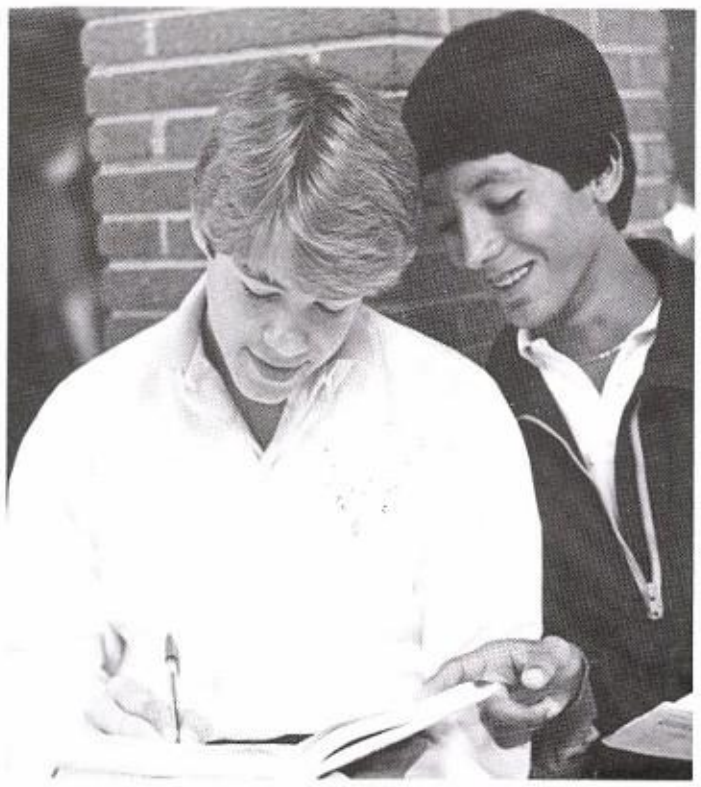
"Well, after I got my schedule cards and went to each class, I realized that I had two English classes and no algebra. I guess I can thank the computer scheduling for that!"

"You're kidding? Don't you have to see your counselor to get your schedule worked out?"

"Yes, and from what I've heard, it's total chaos there. Speaking of chaos, my closets are a wreck, so I need to try to start cleaning them before school begins."

"Okay. See you in biology!"

As she hung up the telephone, she felt relieved that registration was over. The start of school would bring some confusing experiences and some fun ones that she would remember always.



The clock strikes eight

Hurry or you'll be late

Annette drove into the parking lot, desperately looking for a place to park and for her friends. As she looked toward the row on her right, she saw a group of people and . . . HE was there. HE was Jim who had just transferred from Heights. The night before he had asked her to Homecoming. "I can't go over there," she thought to herself as she stuffed the last bit of a donut into her mouth. "I have curlers in my hair. Jim can't see me like this!" Annette pulled into a parking place and immediately started taking the curlers from her hair, thinking, "I need to finish my English homework before . . ." Her thought was interrupted by a tapping on her car window. Glancing up, she recognized Jim who was grinning mischievously. As he opened her car door, he said, "I just wanted to say 'hi' and let you know that I just love the curlers!" Annette was embarrassed that he had seen her in rollers, but he didn't seem to have minded; he still walked her to the library. As she started to study, she thought to herself, "This is going to be a great day!"

The Clairol curl will hold, but will Stephanie? Stephanie Allison gets ready for a big day at school.

Yes, Lee, two plus two does equal four. Lee Norman and Rolendo Hernandez do last minute homework in the front foyer.

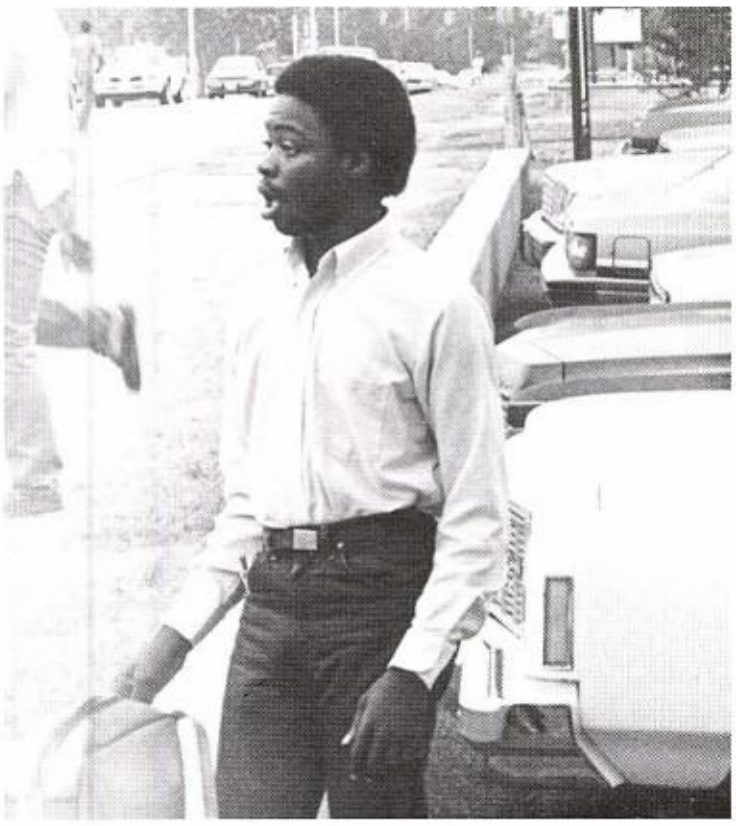
Lee Ann Ennis trudges up the West Bowie hill on her way to school.

Telling jokes before school, Orlanda Craney, Evelyn Chilton, and Angela Williams act silly in the hall.

Parking lots are people places

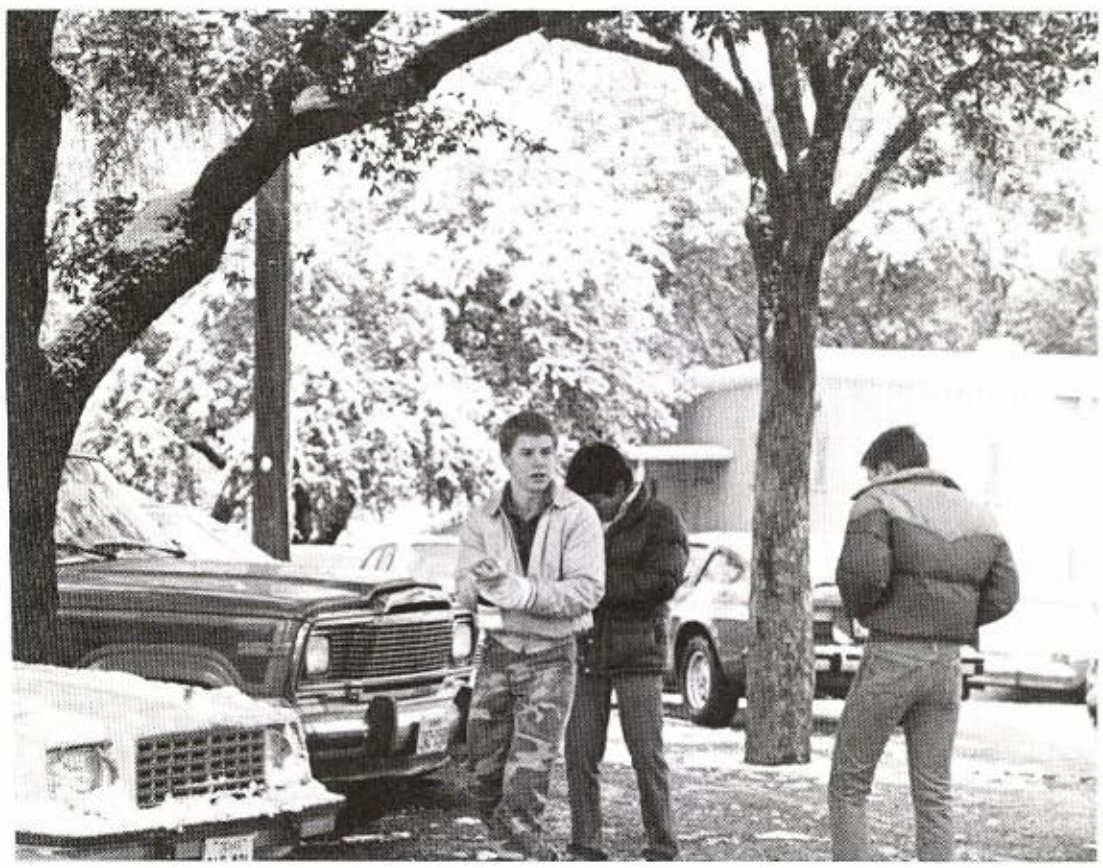
Students check out cars and faces

Waiting for the bell to ring,
Cramming for a test.
Listening to Michael Jackson sing;
Seeing whose car speakers are best.
Watching the team take a victory lap;
Congratulating them for their win.
Skipping fourth period; taking a nap.
This is how the days have been,
These happy high school days,
And a few of the many, many ways
Time was spent in the parking lots.



Melinda Cates gets into her car to go home after a long day.

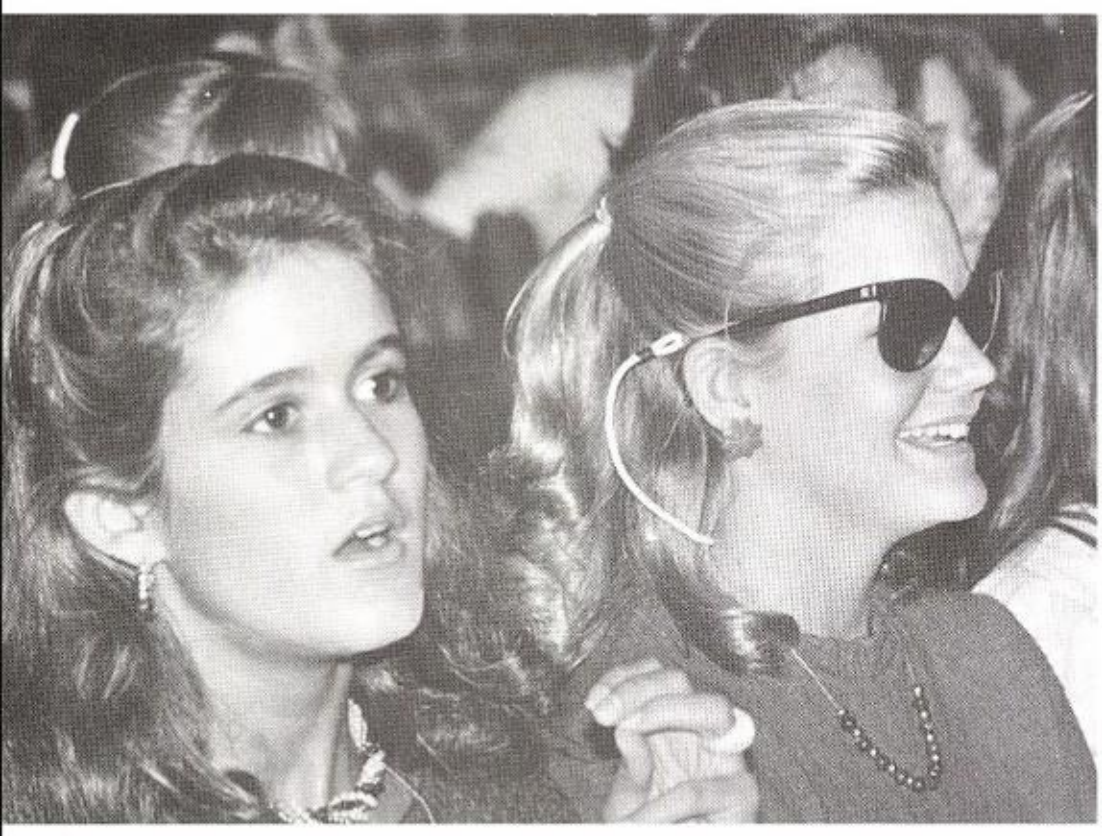
Oh my gosh — look at those freshman girls! Kevin Warren prepares to cross the street to go to campus.



Matt Graves, Rolendo Hernandez, and Joe Griffith play in the snow during first period football.

Annette Hamilton, Susan Roe, and Allison Goone return to school from lunch at Schlotsky's.

Is there really a prince in there? Victor Flores kids with the mysterious frog.



That guy is so cute! Amy Custer and Carole Dubose have fun at the freshman skit.

Julie Edgar enjoys the music of The Sunshine Boys.

The decorations in the front foyer welcome the freshmen during Howdy Week.

Here come the clowns

PHS welcomes freshmen

Seven hundred forty-seven excited freshmen rushed from clown to snowcone to seal, searching for that special name hidden among the hundreds posted on the walls of the front foyer. This was the first of many exciting and new activities discovered during Howdy Week.

Many of the freshmen had a blast at the roller skating party, where the senior guys sported togas and senior girls were clad in anything from polyester to punk. Later, the student body joined the seven hundred forty-seven freshmen to jam along to the country and western music of The Sunshine Boys. Club day, a special day for the freshmen, gave them a chance to join their favorite organizations.

The Howdy Dance, where the students came costumed as flappers, gangsters, cartoon characters, and even M&M's, topped the week's activities. At the Metro Center, everyone rocked to the great hits played by The Sting Rays. Seven hundred forty-seven freshmen thought Howdy Week was a brilliant success, one to remember forever.

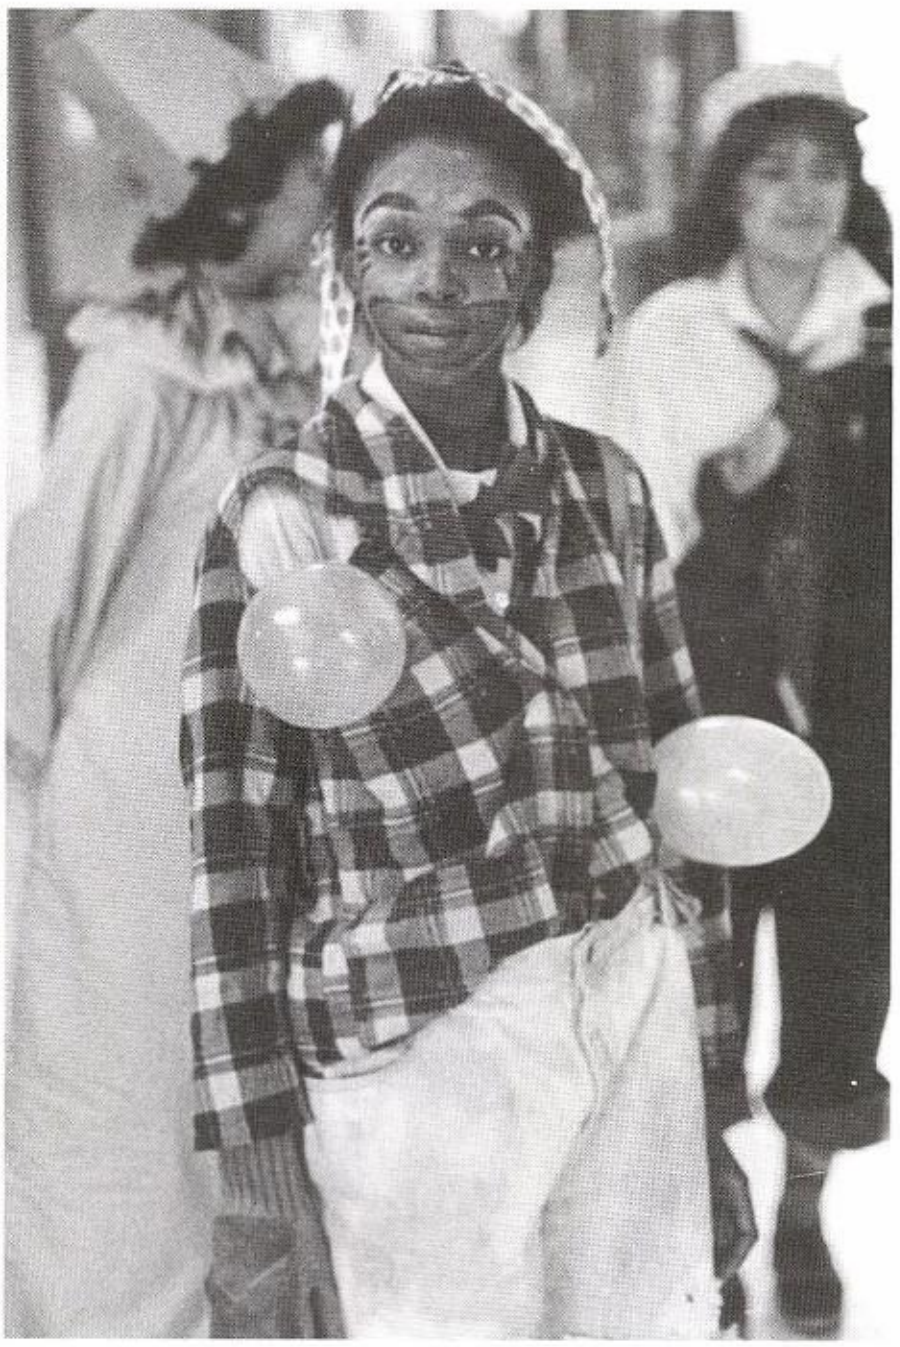
Lou Bramble is proud to be a freshman.



What do you think I am? Tracie Harps dresses up as a clown.

Ms. Ginna Baker shows Mrs. Carol Bott a cake she bought at open house.

Mrs. Nancy McClane arranges name tags for open house.

You got what in English? Mrs. Pris Brutshé discusses grades with her daughter Tracy Traver.

Mr. and Mrs. Sid Mair talk to Mr. Bob Reed at open house.

Open house

Time to get informed

He opend a letter notifying him of an open house where he could meet his daughter's teachers. He could find out how she was doing in school. Although he had asked her and she had said fine, he was still skeptical about her grades. He decided that this would be a perfect opportunity to see how she was really doing.

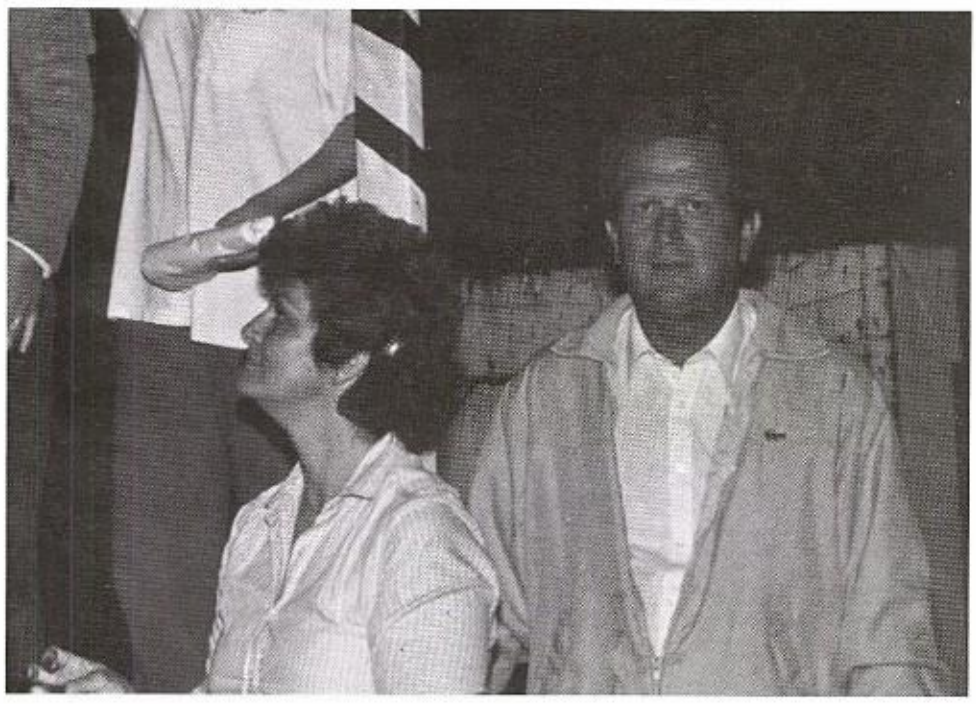
He was amazed to see the large number of parents in the auditorium listening to the band and watching the drill team. After the performance, he got his daughter's schedule and visited her teachers. When he left the building, he was convinced that she was receiving the best education around.

Parents get involved

Making memories for their children

When her first-born enrolled in the ninth grade at the same high school she had attended, she recalled her own treasured memories. She wondered how the school had changed so she decided to take an active roll. First she joined the PTA. She volunteered to sell bumper stickers and spirit shirts and helped in the library once a week. When the gym dances were planned, she chaperoned them.

Through these projects, she watched her freshman son begin to store memories of his own. She assisted her child through the difficulties teen-agers experience. While expanding her own knowledge about Paschal, she also helped to expand the knowledge of her child.



Mrs. Betty Price sells a bumper sticker to Greg Madere.

How'd she talk me into this one? Mr. and Mrs. Bill Pauling supervise the building of the freshman float.

Mrs. Terry Ray helps lighten the load in the library.

Can I leave yet? Mrs. Mary Ann Dorris helps by working the bumper sticker drawing.

Susie spied Joe in the hall before lunch and said, "Joe, do you have that spelling list for next period's test?" With a sly grin, he explained, "Susie, I am not in your English class — that is my brother John. It's already the sixth week of school and you don't know that?"

To her surprise, the "real" Joe met them in the hall. Susie asked if people often confused them. John confessed that they could change places in classes and teachers wouldn't even notice. Although having a twin makes being your own person even that much harder, both John and Joe agreed that they would never trade his brother for anyone.

A double take

Two is better than one

Mix 'n' Match. Can you pair the twins?

Howard Haber cringes as John cruises along.

Andrew and Donald Migot wait for class to start.

Mother! Nana and Norma Rivas call home.

Charles Dewar tells his brother John of the "Deware Charm."

Paulette, Lizette, Kathy, and Mellisa Moss are a handful.

Jamie — is that your date to homecoming? Lori and Jamie Key show sisterly love.

The Lovely Lucignagnis — Dana, Suzanne and Angie — take a break from school.

A family affair

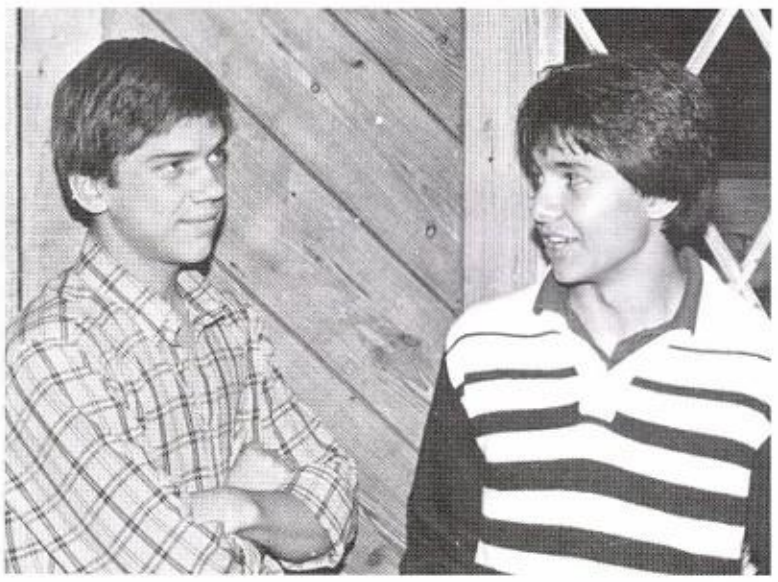
Legacies strengthen purple reign

An hour before the game and Janet's room still wasn't clean. After seeing Janet's room the day before, her mother issued the ultimatium that her room be spotless or she couldn't go to the game. Janet sorted through the paraphernalia: "lost" homework, old clothes she would never wear again, and a variety of shoe boxes stuffed with notes from middle school. She knew it would be a long time before she finished cleaning her room.

Ten minutes later under a stack of old records, she discovered a '58 PANTHER. This was her mother's old high school annual. As Janet thumbed through the old book, she laughed at her mom's old steady and the different kinds of clothes. Later she found her sister's 1976 annual and her brother's '78 PANTHER. As Janet stacked the books aside, she realized that these books were simply not just old annuals but memories. Though the fads had changed with the times, one thing remained constant — the tradition of going and then coming home to PASCHAL HIGH SCHOOL.

Students socialize at lunch

Junk food and conversation fill the campus



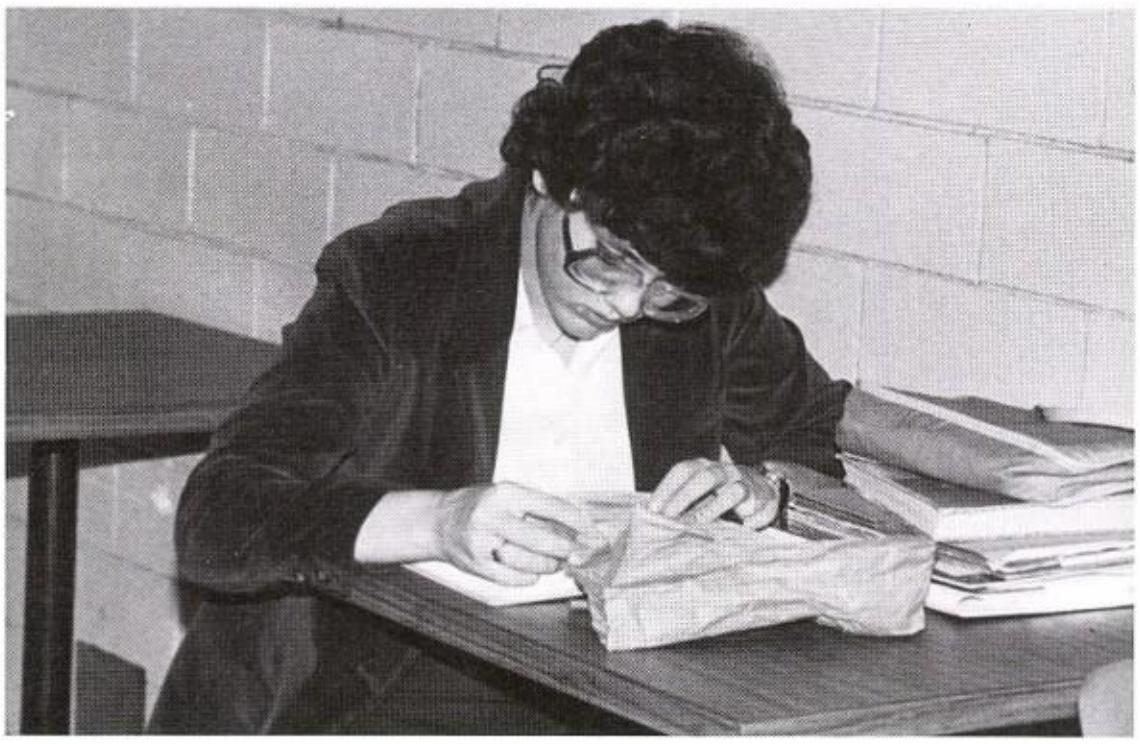
After fourth period, Cindy watched her older sister leave campus for lunch; however, Cindy really liked staying on campus. There were really interesting things to do. She and her friends ordered pictures from the last dance and gossiped about the day's activities. Over a coke and a piece of pizza, she reviewed for her Spanish test. Cindy found that, although the lunch room provided a place to eat, it also offered a place for studying and visiting with all her friends.

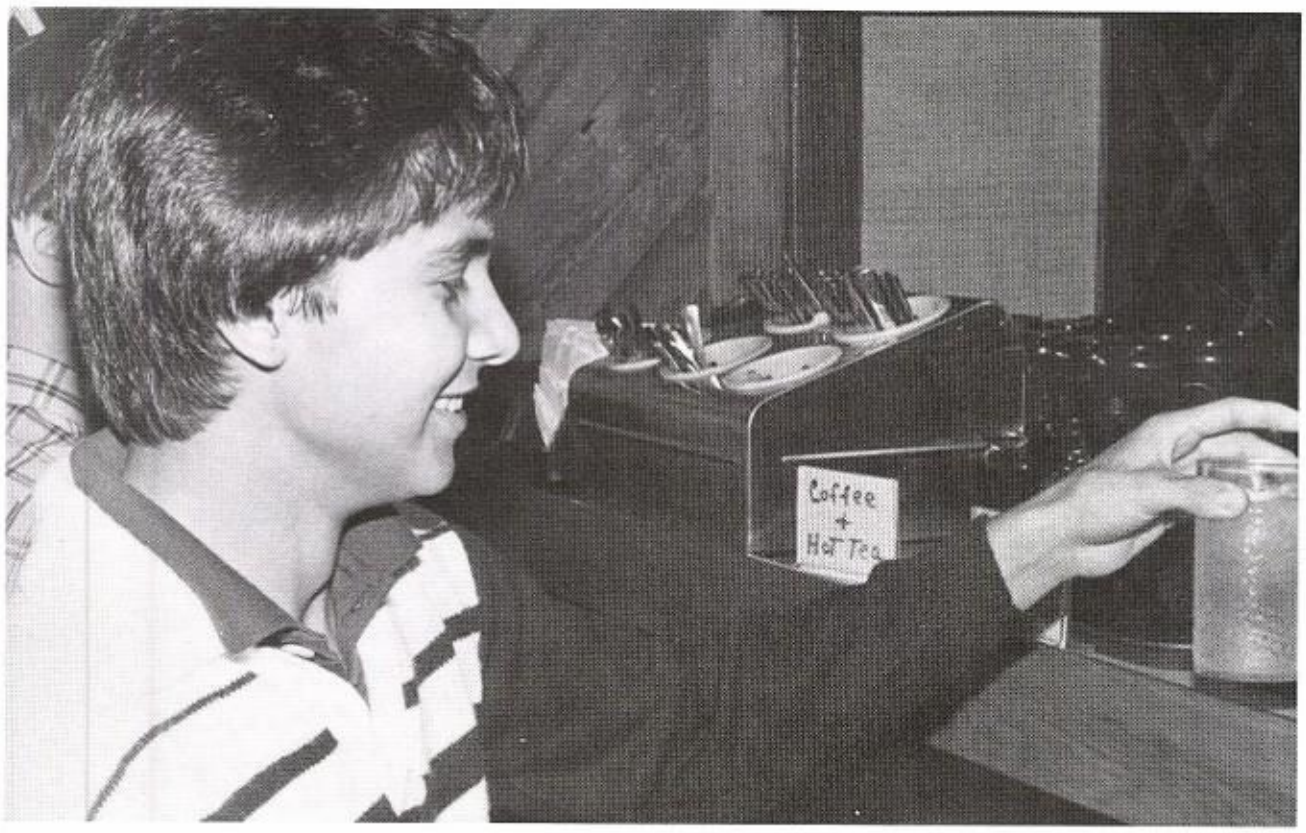
During a Saturday lunch at the Back Porch Mike Diaz and Waymond McAllister discuss plans for the evening.

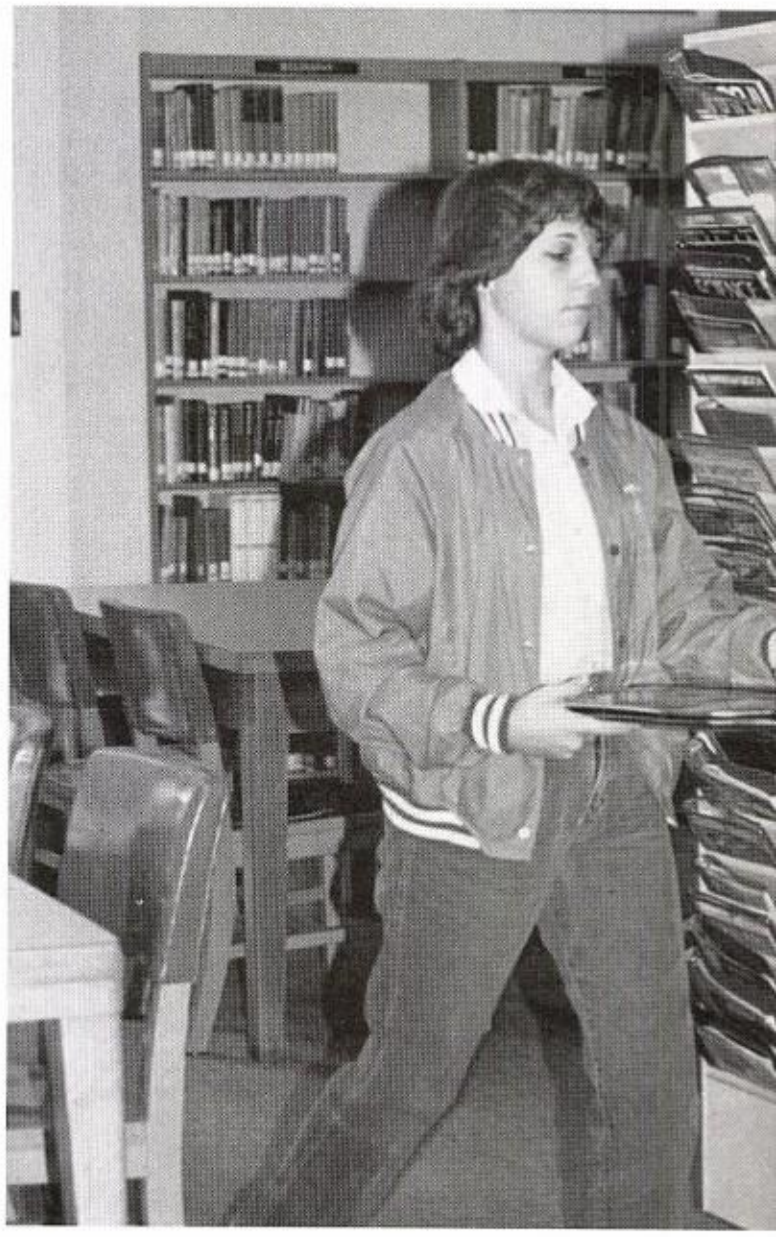
Everywhere you go Sweet and Low. Stevey Smith and Cheryl Smith enjoy lunch at the Back Porch.

Gale Budlove finishes her book report during lunch.

She did what? ... Sherrie Strain combs Monique McDow's hair during lunch.





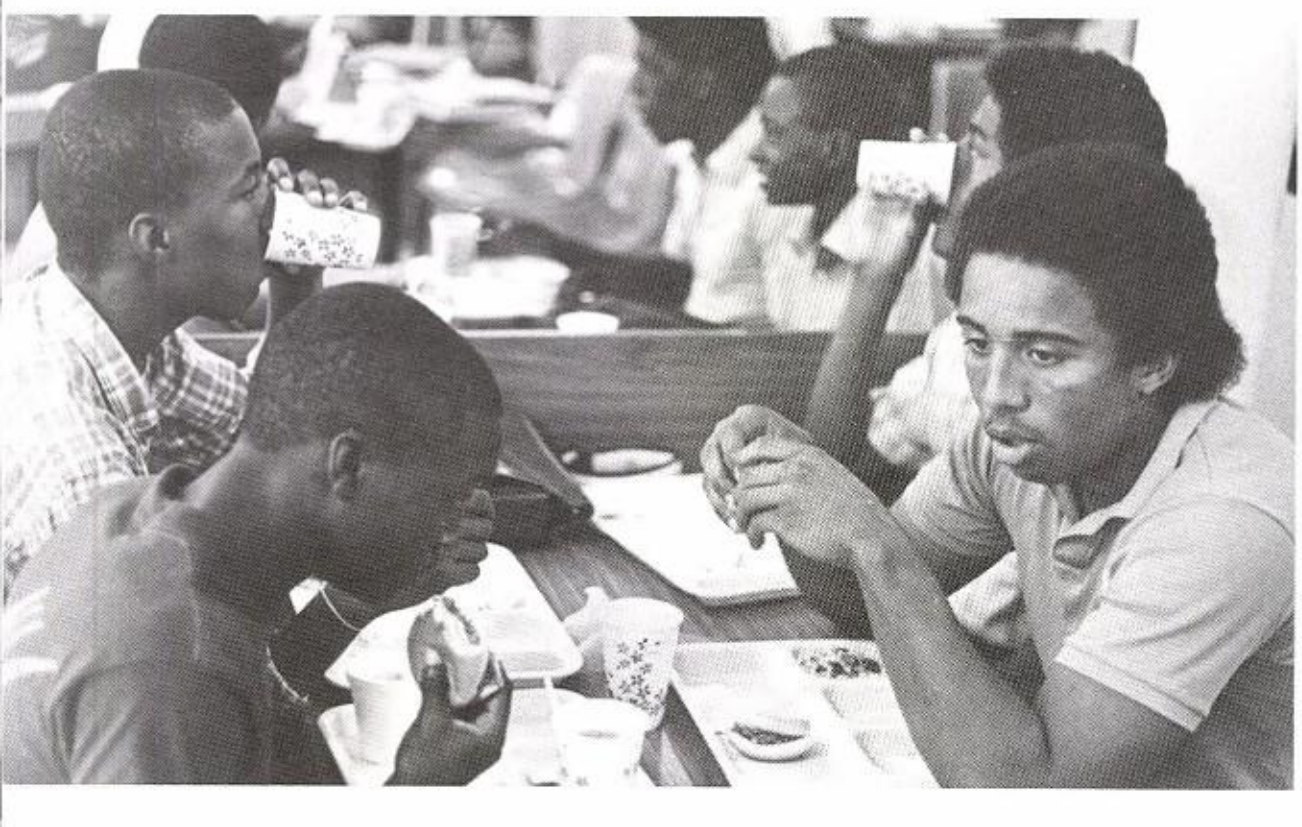


Mike Diaz tries to decide between refreshments during lunch.

Donna Wesley checks out fashion news and chocolate recipes in SEVENTEEN magazine.

You got another love letter? Horace Taylor and Steve Donald discuss a hot letter at lunch.

Traven Williams, Larry Warren, Donald Minor, and Henry Gentry contemplate the lunch they have just eaten.



Panthers prepare for perfection

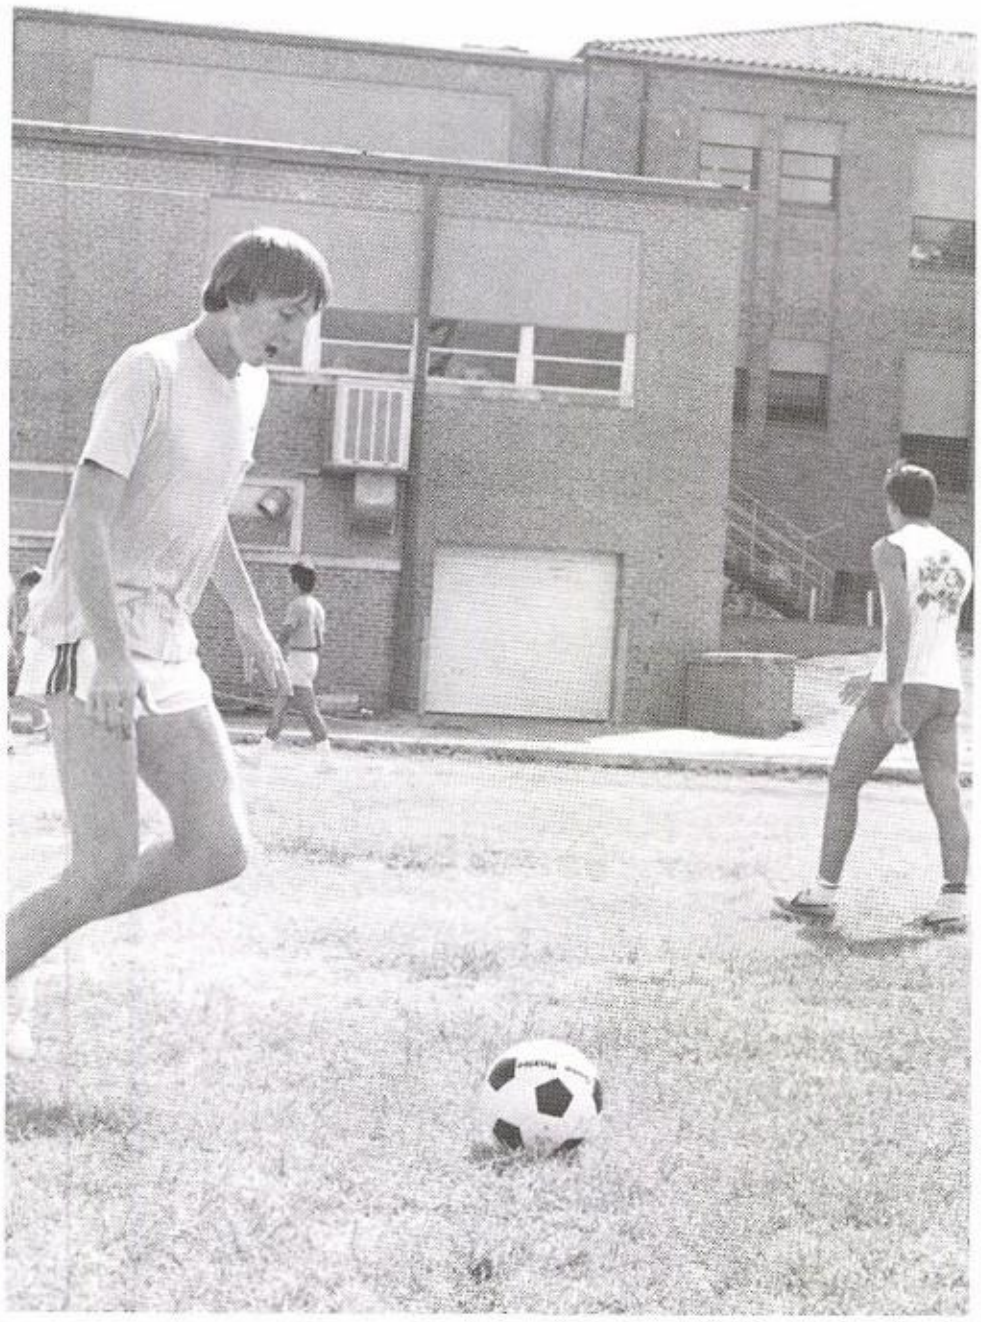
Athletes work out daily

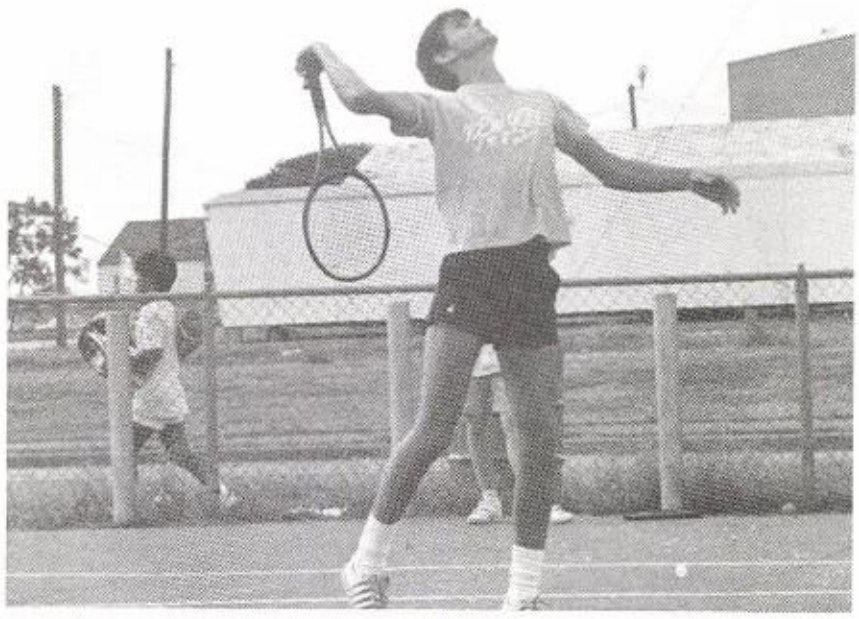
Michelle Helm spikes a ball during a practice volleyball game.

They suddenly realized that the lazy days of summer were over. For the athletes this meant no more leisurely days by the pool or taking a nap in mid-afternoon, but most of all, this meant workouts every day. These consisted of determination, devotion, and a few aches and pains. "I'm too tired," or "Let's wait until tomorrow" were commonly heard phrases when it came time to practice. The Panthers, nevertheless, knew it would pay off when game time came. In the gym or on the field, athletes were always on the move, preparing for one thing, "VICTORY."

Look mom no hands. Lori Sullivan hurdles for track.

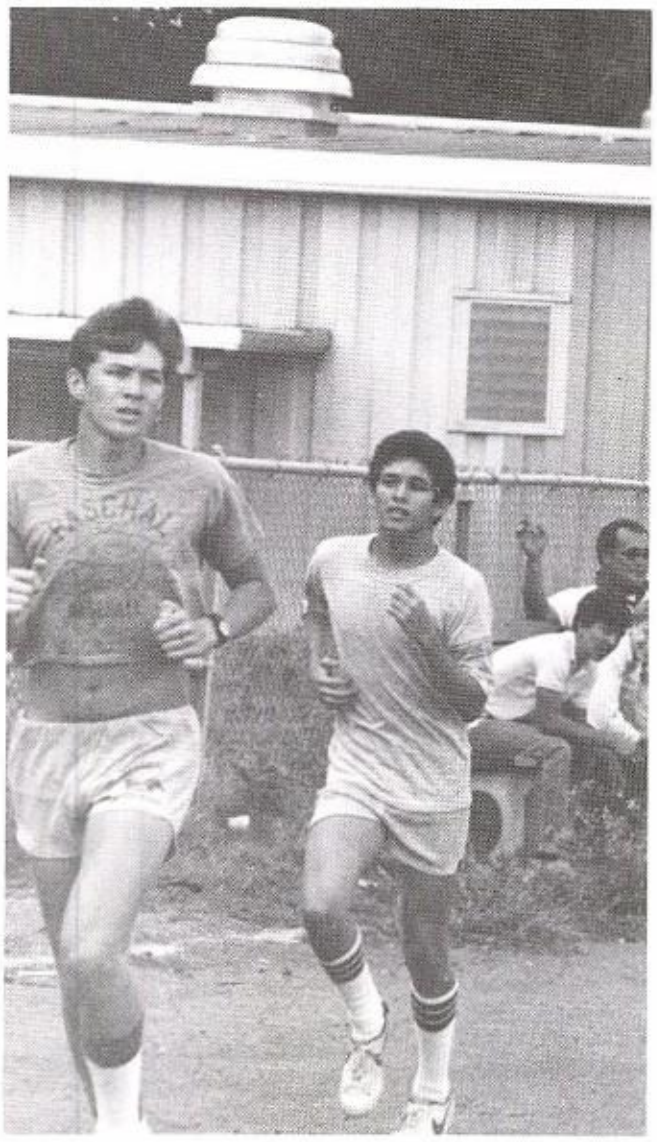
Nathan Ludvigson and Dexter Wilborn practice defense drills while Alex Cox and Coach Hall watch.





I've got it. Bill Hearne exercises his overhand for tennis.

Look what I found. Kelly McDonald kicks the ball during soccer.



Michael Hawthorne and Homer Ramirez run for fitness in baseball.

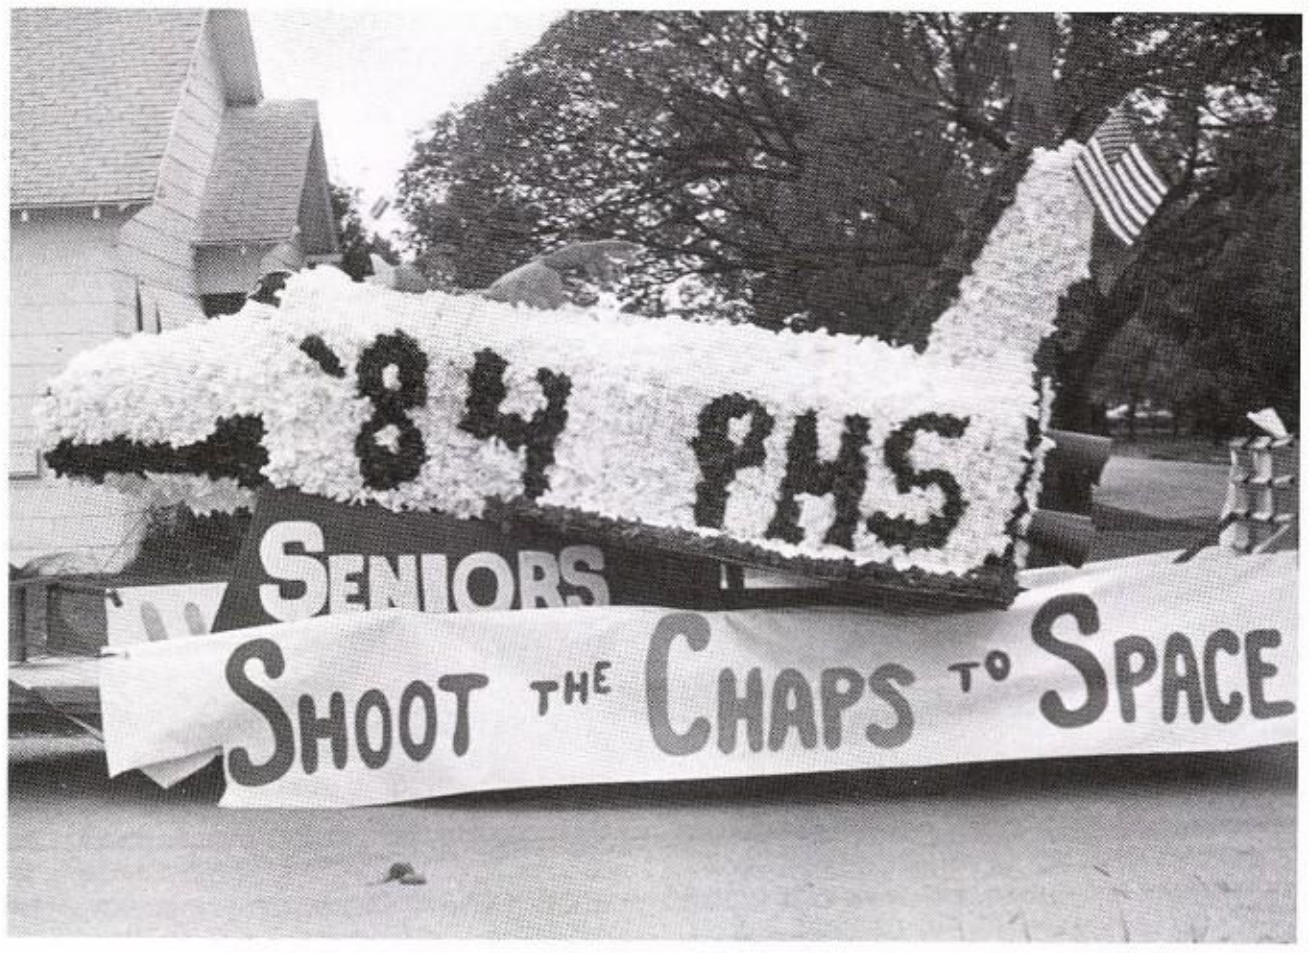
Christel Hinojosa shows her talent in soccer.

Here comes Big Foot! The sophomore float tours Farrington Field.

Cheer up, Connie! Last year's Homecoming queen, Erica Flores, hands over her crown to Connie Johnson.

The Spirit Steppers and the band perform for the Homecoming crowd.

The senior float is prepared for the parade around the school.



Excitement was in the air. She noticed it everywhere she went. She overheard football players firing themselves up for the big game, and groups of freshmen, sophomores, juniors, and seniors discussing pranks they wanted to pull during the homecoming pep rally.

She was busy going to her senior float meetings, working on banners for the pep rally, and practicing the senior girls' line dance. She stayed after school almost every day. Either she was painting football players' names on streamers to hang from the auditorium ceiling, or she was struggling to learn the words to the line dance. She couldn't wait for the pep rally, the game, and the dance. All her friends and her really fun date would make this the best homecoming ever!

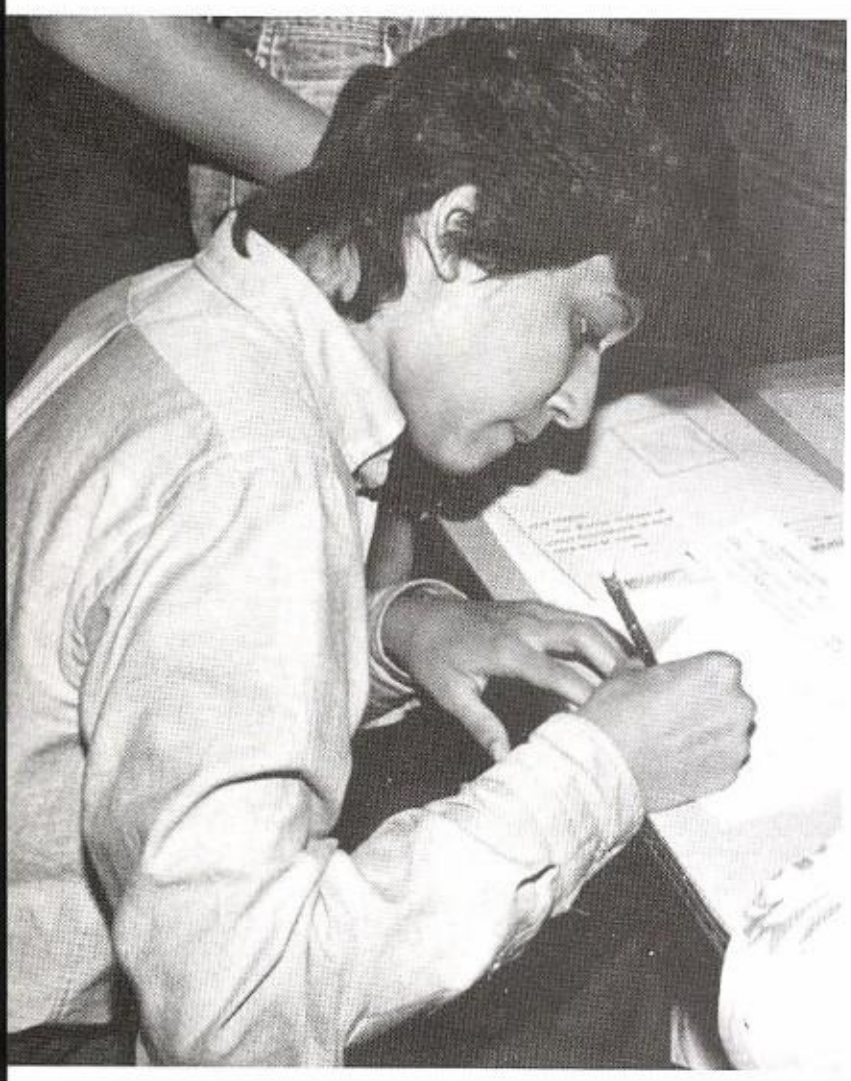
It's under a dollar; buy it now!

Book covers, Gummy bears, Mint bars, Snickers . . .

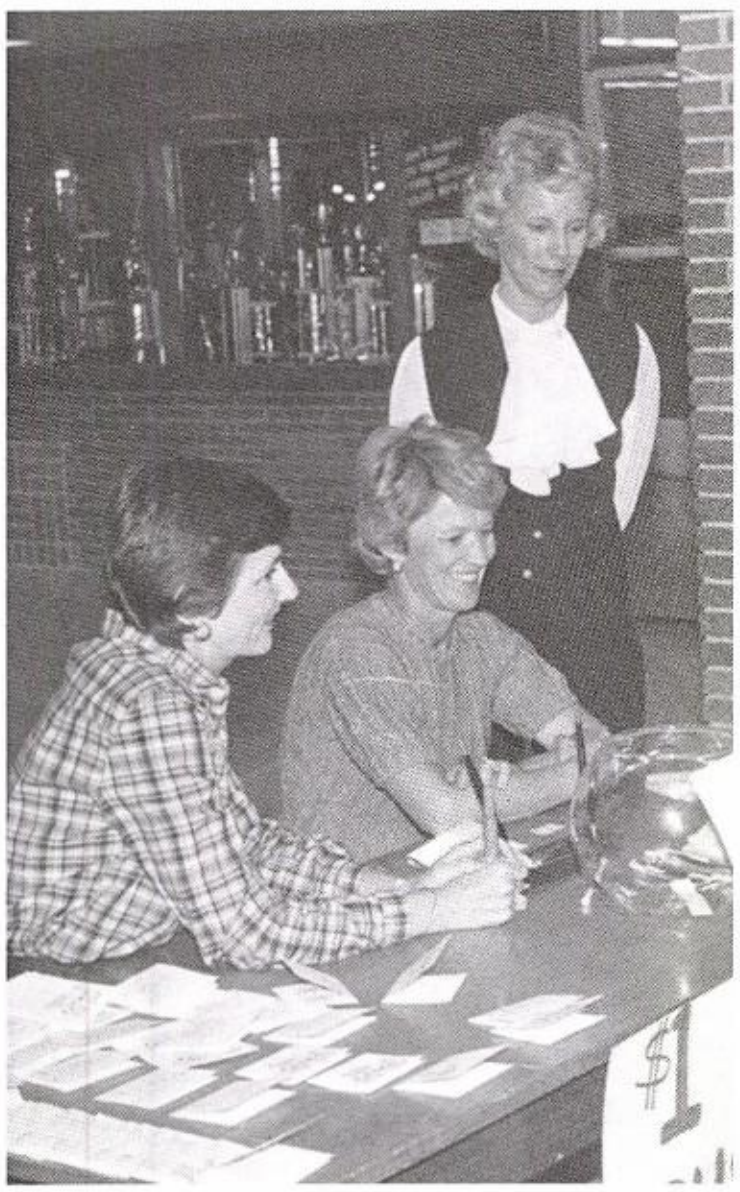
Where could you have gone this year to find the best buys at the lowest prices? Your best bet would have probably been school! Hopefully, you got your copy of the 1984 Paschal Pin-ups calendar to help you remember those important dates. If you bought a telephone directory from an LC member, you could reach out and touch someone; that is, if they went to Paschal. For those days that your stomach began to growl in 4th period, those Blow-pops, M&M's, Mint bars, and Gummy bears really hit the spot. Perhaps you were the lucky winner of a 12 inch TV from the baseball team. Seniors saved you up to 50% on the magazine of your choice. By the end of the year, if you had any money left, there were still things to buy like key chains, spirit ribbons, T-shirts, and much more!!!



Felicia De La Paz sells undergraduate pictures.

Rena Lopez, Celia Rosas and Ruth Delgado show off the spirit ribbons they just bought.

Amy Turlington, Kim Gregory and Ellen Breaux buy Howdy tickets from Mr. Lotspeich while Sean Finley and Paula Chairez look on.



I better get my $2.00 back! Karen Hall buys stock from Allison Goone.

Candace Griffin sells a key ring to Mike Maness.

Mrs. Martha Foard, Mrs. Nancy McLane and Mrs. Jean Ray sell bumper stickers to parents at a PTA meeting.

South Pacific sails away to success

Singing and dancing make a fine show

Mary Catherine stood in the wings watching Whitney and Tom during the opening scene. She motioned for Clay and Jodie to be ready for scene changes. Trills of the chorus warming up and groans of dancers stretching were all part of opening night and every other night of South Pacific's five day run. The musical, a combined effort of the drama and music departments, was directed by Ms. Susan Williams and Mrs. Joy Howington. The cast, virtually all new actors, was the largest ever assembled. Now that the play was well under way, Mary Catherine got her first break of the night. Sitting back with a sigh, she was ready for the big event — Andy Shapter's debut as a girl. The rest didn't last long, because the demanding duties of stage manager called, but Mary Catherine knew South Pacific would be a success.

Lori Prall, Nancy Wright, Michelle Carter, and Tracey Traver are amazed by Andy Shapter's dancing abilities.

Stage manager Mary Catherine Howell sets the stage before a rehearsal.

Candace Bender, Amy Custer, Cookie Ray, and Stephanie Allison sing praises to the gods.

Kerrie Willis talks to Scott Moore and Nancy Wilcox after the play.

Did you know Luther's dressed like a girl? Doug Bell and Mike Guthrie perform a scene in South Pacific.

Tom Orr, Michelle Taylor, and My Ly take their bows at the end of South Pacific.

Michelle Taylor and Andy Shapter take a stroll along the beaches.

You stingy fool! Cookie Ray argues over money as Bloody Mary.

Candace Griffin puts on her make-up as Scott Baker walks in the door.

Projects challenge students

Productivity demands thought

When the first lunch bunch entered the teachers' lounge, they heard Mrs. Blaylock exclaim, "Oh boy! I get to grade 150 insect projects tonight! You should see what some of my students gave me."

"I know what you mean," replied Coach Stephens. "One of the cell projects I received was a pizza!"

"Projects?" asked Mr. Bennett, "I have my students hand one in every six weeks. Some are very interesting."

Listening closely, Mr. Calhoun told them about his humanities projects. "This week some of my students handed in needlepoint projects they have been working on."

"I can't wait to start my egg project," inserted Mrs. Davidson. "The kids really enjoy painting them."

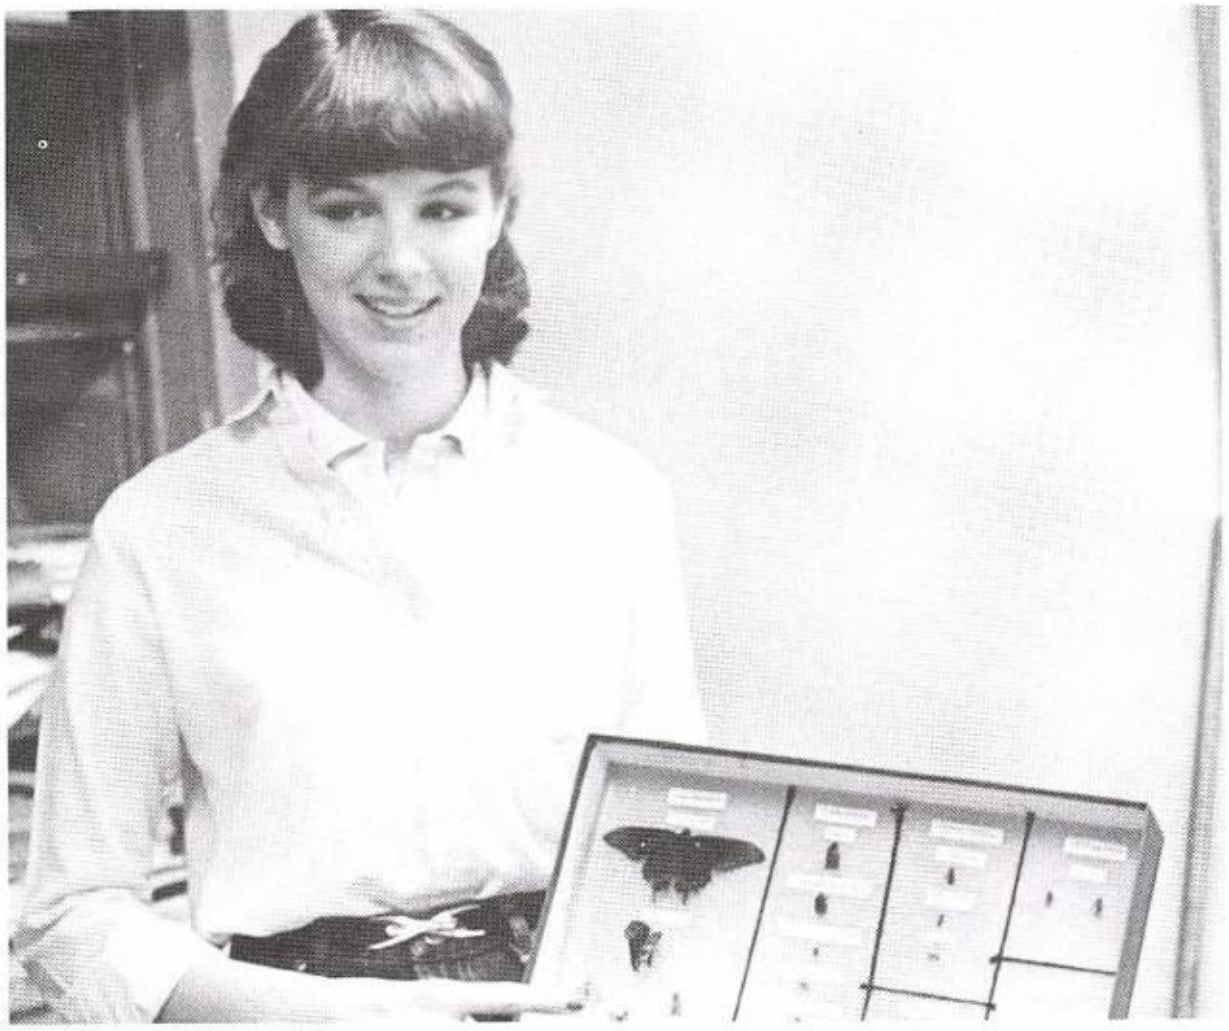
"You actually enjoy grading projects?" asked one of the new teachers.

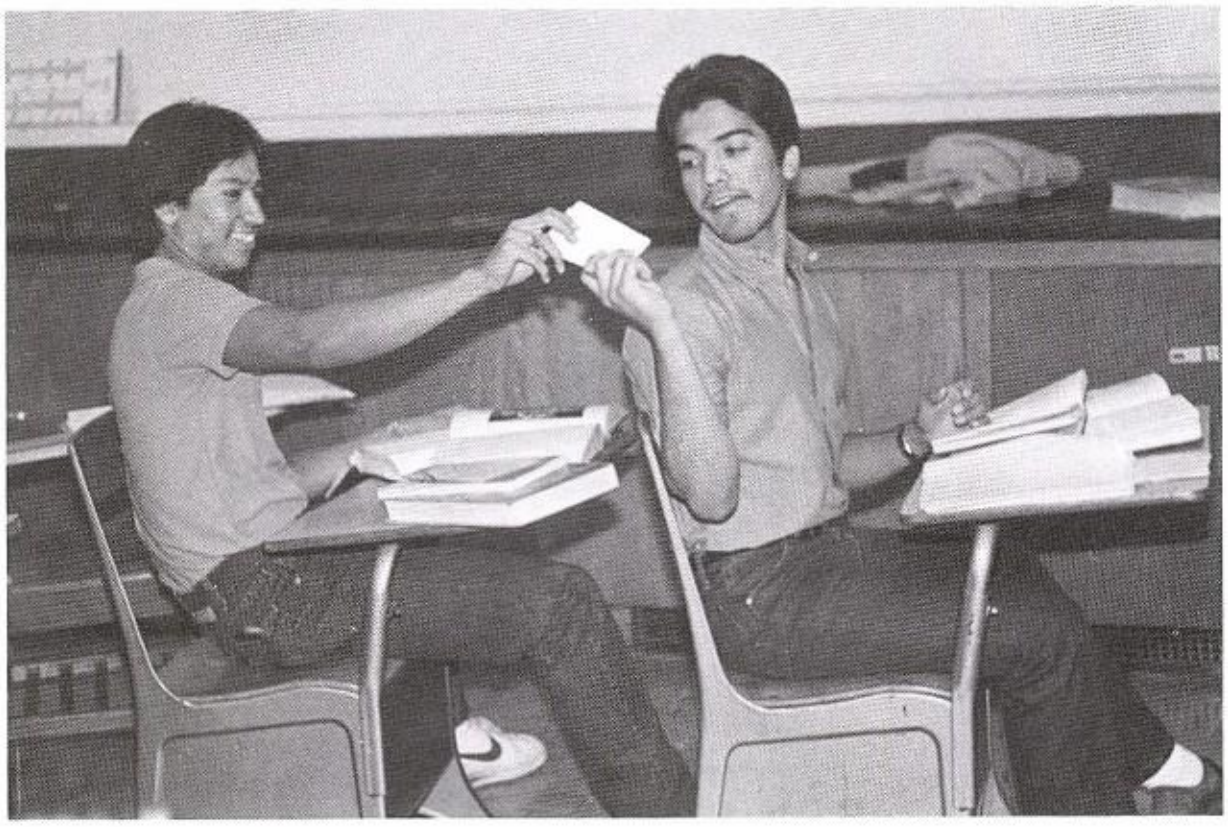
"I like them," replied Mrs. Blaylock. "It gives the students a break from written homework and tests their originality."

"I agree. I don't know what I'd do without projects," replied Mrs. Davidson.

"Well," Mrs. Blaylock continued, "I don't know how I'm going to grade all of these projects tonight, but I'll try."

Suddenly, the bell rang. Mrs. Blaylock and Mrs. Davidson finished the last bites of lunch and rushed to their classrooms — Mrs. Davidson to her egg projects and Mrs. Blaylock to her insect projects.





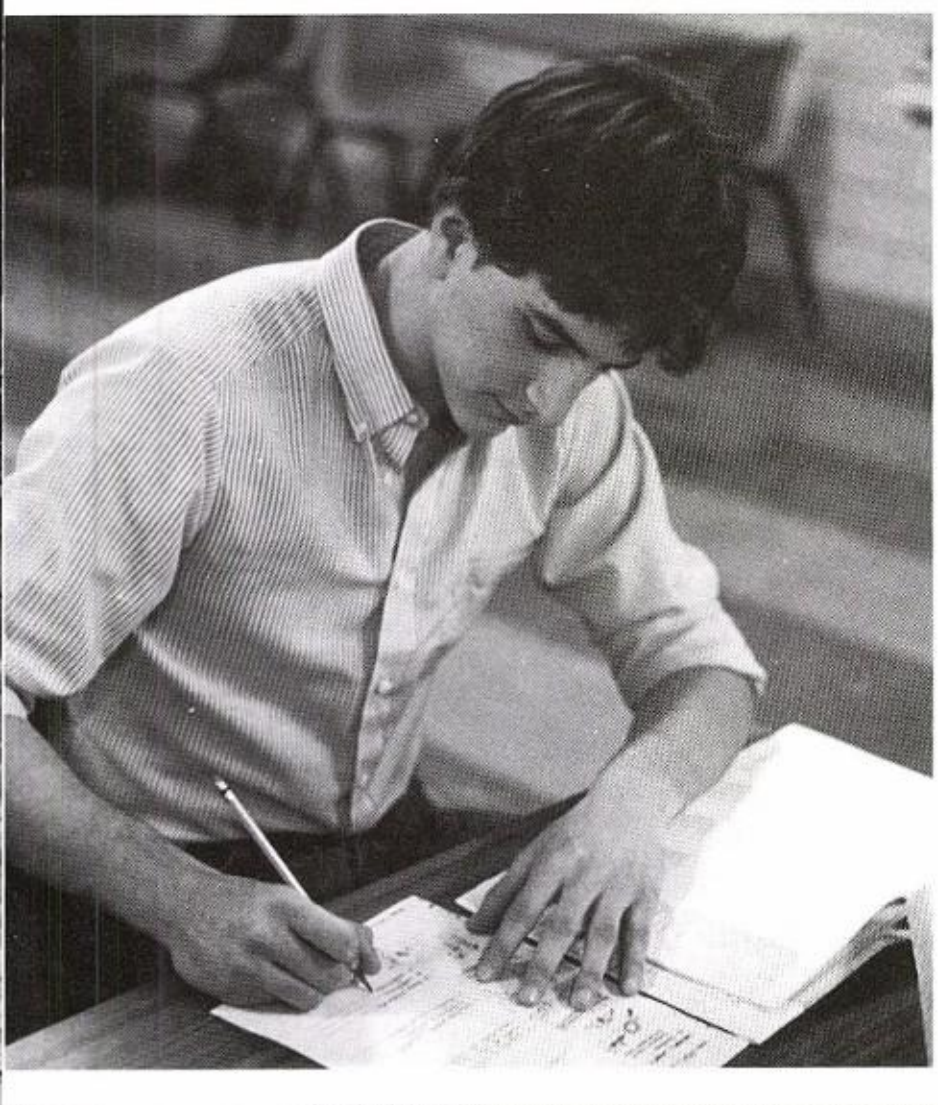
No, this isn't my lunch! Kim Johnson explains her insect project in biology.

Well, maybe just one more! John Acosta borrows a notecard from Elliott Bargas.

Annette Dexter pauses to think which letter goes where.

Exams test knowledge

Tough essays baffle brains



PSAT — apprehension
Final exams — late night studying
ACT — frustration
SAT — nervousness
TABS — frantic schedules
Six weeks test — relief
Pop test — surprise!
Essay test — confusion
Weekly quiz — monotonous
Achievement test — really hard
Advanced Placement — difficult
Unit Test — procrastination
Multiple choice — deduction
True/False — optional
Physical fitness test — endurance
Scan-Tron tests — Thank goodness for computers

Kelly Hornbeck studies in the cafeteria before school.

This sure isn't the Romantics! Martha Cardona takes a test over the Classical period in humanities.

Anita Lopez takes a "microscopic" test in biology.

You deserve a break today

School parties are fun

When someone says "party," many things can come to mind: birthday parties, dinner parties, political parties, party lines, party dresses, party favors, party games, and ... party poopers. None of these compared, however, to the parties and special days at PHS. The AP English class's Battle of Hastings and the Senior Activities engagement party for Ms. Turner gave students a chance for a fun day in a class they had worked hard in all year. Dress-up days were fun when people were able to be elves, ringmasters, or Siamese twins for a day. The third Panther Hall of Honor day recognized past graduates who had done outstanding work in their profession. The day Drew Pearson, a noted wide receiver for the Dallas Cowboys, came to talk to the whole student body brought excitement to everyone who wanted to hear and to see him. A party is defined as "a gathering for social entertainment, or the entertainment itself, often of a specific nature." To the people of 3001 Forest Park Boulevard., it also meant celebrating, having fun, and taking time out from the hectic schedules faced every day.

Oh, how cute! Anne Giordano and Laura Van Amburgh dresses-up for Christmas.

Lori Key, Gena Kirkland, and Clark Jones talk at an AFS club party.

Once upon a time ... Mrs. Sue Smith plays Mother Goose for an AP English party.

Fashion fanfare features flare

Presenting: The pick of Paschal

Kim, will you go out with me? . . . David Wall, who wears a coat and tie, compliments Kim Gibson in her party dress.

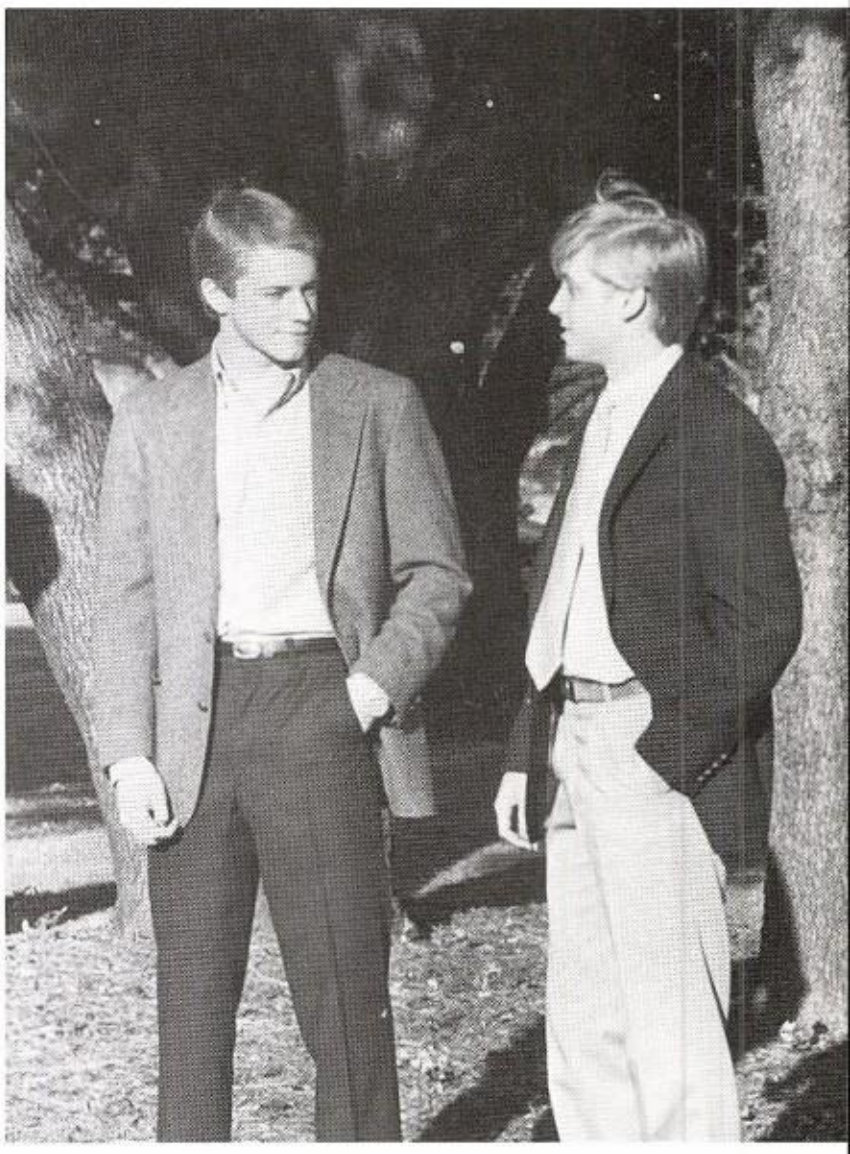
Argyles and solids are the top in sweaters as seen on Herbert Collins and Paul McCloud.

Mai Ly models a cool cotton jumper, a must for spring.

Melissa Lemon, wearing a wool skirt and sweater vest, talks to Sharon Scott on a warm winter day.

What looked great at Paschal:
clean lines and fluid shapes, loose and long jackets, short tops and long tops, mini skirts and mini dresses, coats and ties, slacks and jeans, T-shirts and oxfords, bulky sweaters and vested sweaters.

Students at Paschal exhibited all forms of fashion from the GQ look to the VOGUE look. 1984 was a year of anything goes. Paschalites seemed fashion conscious and showed a great interest in future fashions. The last word on fashion fanfare '84 was FUN!



The textured form of bulky sweaters, thick corduroy, smooth cotton and leather is modeled by Melissa Cox and Caroline Wilson.

Diane Stanley and Leslie Senevey show what fashions they are really interested in!

The tailored "collegiate" look includes: slacks, blazers, starched oxfords, ties, and sometimes sweaters; these were excellent choices for John Bristol and Scott Morris.

Oxford cloth shirts, jackets, and jeans are exceedingly stylish among John McClane, Zachary Moore and Joe Ruelas.

RRRING!
She: Hello?
He: Cindy? This is Jay. You know . . . in your third period class?
She: Hi, Jay. Do you need the homework assignment?
He: Well, no, I..uh..just called to talk to you actually.
She: Oh. (silence)
She: Um..The weather sure is nice.
He: Yea, and I heard it's supposed to be sunny all weekend.
She: Oh, really?
He: Yea, and um, well, speaking of this weekend, would you, uh, like to go out with me?
She: I'd love to!
He: Great! Then it's a date.

Paschal flings into Spring

Panthers find a place in the sun

As Anne grudgingly walked to the library to finish her bibliography cards, the halls were deserted: Where was everyone? An epidemic, commonly called senioritis, had swept through Paschal leaving only a long absentee list as evidence. The only sure-fire cure for this contagious disease was a crisp spring afternoon, but Anne diligently started her research. Her mind, nevertheless, wandered from The Reader's Guide and Thoreau to the too short breezy afternoons spent playing ball in the crowded park. Anne quickly finished her bib-cards, resolutely left the library, and happily contracted a severe case of spring fever.

Activities occupy time

Students develop talents

"Ralph, why didn't you tell me so many students were involved in extra-curricular activities?" querried new principal Radford Gregg. He had just learned about a girl who had taken tap, ballet, jazz, and toe for twelve years and that three girls had been finalists in beauty pageants. He told about the two students who spent hours practicing cello and harp with a local symphony. Mr. Gregg had also found the creative ability of one boy had resulted in his being asked to illustrate a local organization's souvenir booklet!

Mr. Miller listened to all the news and then asked, "Did you know six students studied Texas government at Boys' State and Girls' State during the summer?" He also bragged about the boy who spent every weekend practicing bareback riding and chute dogging. Another of his anecdotes for Mr. Gregg was about the boy that not only played football but also coached a boys' Pee Wee basketball team.

As their conversation concluded, both principals had smiles on their faces. Student accomplishments just naturally brought that proud look.

Last game Highlights season Arlington Heights defeated

As the football team boarded the bus, the smiles on their faces and their chests sticking out displayed their pride. They had just won the most important game of the season — The Arlington Heights game. All the other games had mattered to them, but this had been the most important one of all. Not only was Arlington Heights their arch-rival, but by beating Heights, the Panthers had knocked them out of the district play-offs. After the game, they felt as though PHS belonged in the district play-offs. They had run off 64 rushing plays for 289 yards and had 18 first downs. To highlight the game, one of the defensive backs intercepted five passes when it really counted. This game had definitely been won by teamwork. When they pulled up to the field house, their pride increased even more as all the students in the parking lot cheered and congratulated them on such a great season.

Superstitions rule player's season's scores improve

After the first victorious game, Larry worked to keep the good luck. Every week he ate the same foods, wore the same clothes, and did the same things that he had done the previous triumphant week. On Mondays, he wore a certain long sleeved t-shirt, faded jeans, and his multi-colored All Star tennis shoes. Tuesday was a day of faded blue jeans with a regular t-shirt. Since most of the games were on Thursday, it was necessary to see his girlfriend, Nancy, on Wednesday. Then Thursday was the big day! Larry wore his jeans with the spot on the right leg and his game shirt. For breakfast, he ate two eggs to make him feel really great. After going through a lucky day, it was mandatory that he watch his favorite television show, "The Munsters," while eating supper of roast, potatoes, broccoli and cheese sauce, and, of course, a milkshake with eggs. After eating, he would put his game shirt back on and rush to the fieldhouse. A prayer by himself in the shower ended his long week of superstitions. If Larry did all these things, his week went smoother and he felt more confidence about the game.

I got him, I got him! Blair Norman (24) attempts to tackle a Heights player as Charles Kelly (66) and Heights' defensemen look on.

Coach Glen Wood goes over the team's plays with Gary Burton (75), Mike Maness (64), Bill Brown (51), and Derrick Williams (32).

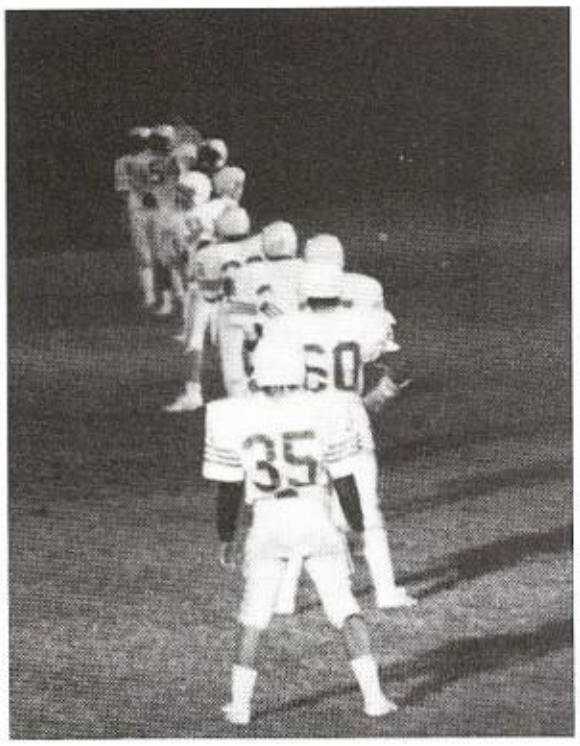
Two-a-days prove tenacity
Team's work for victory



Two-a-days . . . just the thought gave Scott, a second string center, a funny feeling. The many hours of sweat and pain were not fun, but then he remembered the thrill after a winning game. "It all pays off in the end," he would remind himself as he practiced in the late afternoon heat. The first game seemed so far away. Yet, the thought of being out on the field in pads and a new jersey, playing with all his effort was an exciting encouragement.

On the morning of the first game, Mark, the first string center, came hobbling into the field house on crutches. He had injured his leg in practice the day before. As Mark was telling the coaches what the doctor had said, Scott listened closely. "Yeah, the doctor said I need to keep off it for at least three months, and no contact sports for nine to ten months," he explained.

Scott thought for a minute. If Mark was first string and out for the season, this meant that he, Scott, would play first string for the whole season. He had to let everyone see that he was as good as Mark, and he did. He was fantastic! It was obvious that Scott had been practicing hard. After the game, people came to him and congratulated him for his fine play. In his moment of glory the thought, "Two-a-days."

The freshman football team stood on the sidelines nervously waiting for the first game of the season to begin. Their hearts pounded with anticipation. Some popped their knuckles while others adjusted their shoulder pads and helmets. The game began. The tension grew as they started to play. The coach barked out his instructions which were followed meticulously. When the game ended, the players remembered the many sacks, interceptions, and the big bomb that had decided the game. From the first kickoff to the final whistle of the last play, the freshman team could be proud of themselves.

Varsity B-ballers Show strength trut their stuff

During the last thirty seconds of the game, the Western Hills Cougars led 71 to 68. The Panther spectators felt that they had already lost, but Eric Purvey proved that he wasn't ready to give up just yet. He danced around the court and scored two more points for Paschal. The crowd roared with the hope that their team was back in the game. Instead of hearing "We'll get 'em next time," the whole stadium rang with screams for victory. With only seconds left, the Panthers gained eight more points. The score was 79 to 76. Though the Cougars had struggled to stay ahead, Paschal had pulled into the lead. With a mixture of talent, determination, and a little help from the crowd, the Panthers cooked up a great season.

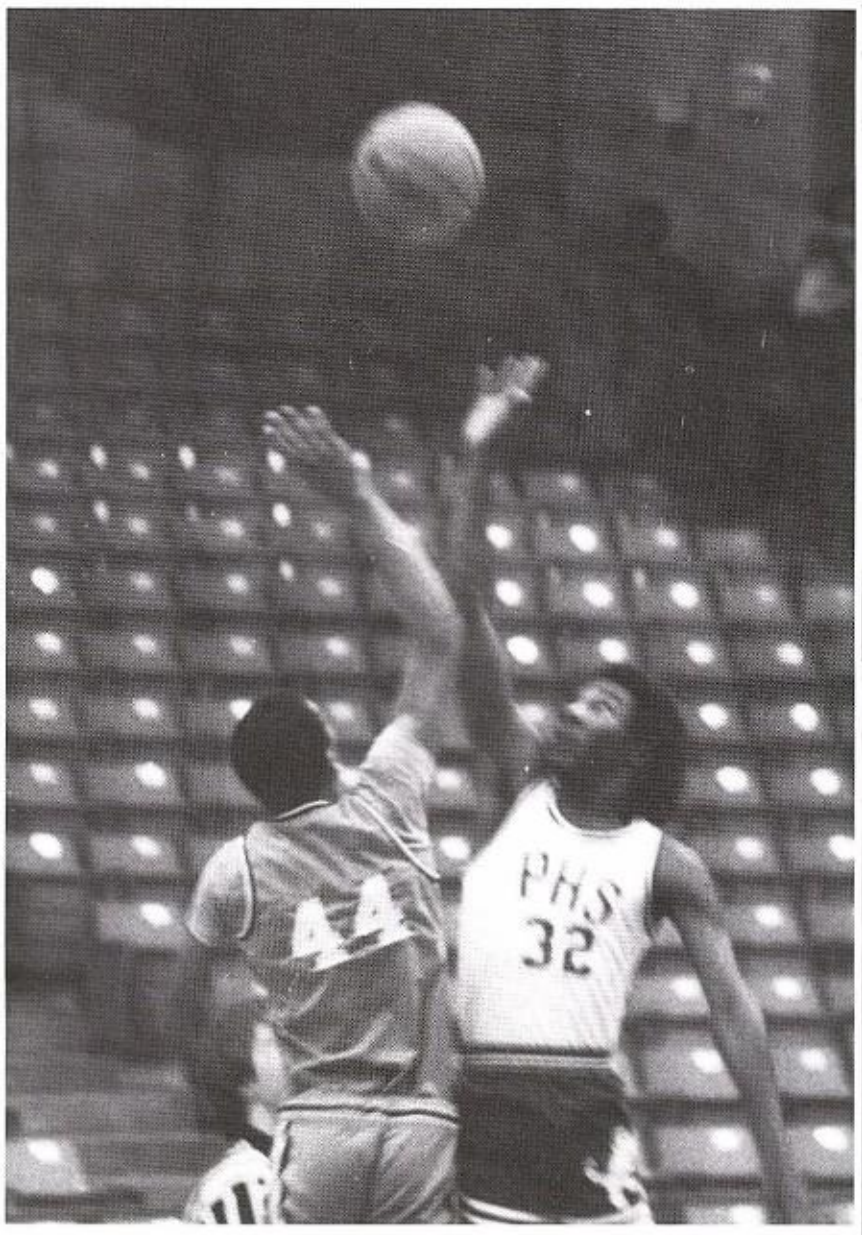
Team Wins Hoopin' it up highlights JV season

It was the last game of the season for the JV basketball team and beating Dunbar was on his mind. He remembered August when he couldn't wait for the season to start because the extensive running and ball handling drills were so tedious. All he could think of then was how he wished the season would continue.

He sat thinking about the upcoming game. This game had extra meaning not only because it was the last game but also because the opponent was Dunbar. Out of all the teams in district, Dunbar was the team he wanted to beat most. He pictured himself bringing the ball down court with 15 seconds left, down by one. He would make a move, drive the lane, and move in for a reverse slam dunk to win the game.

He awoke when Coach Earwood walked in and told the team to hit the court.



Ronald Bailey brings the ball downcourt to begin the offense.

Patrick Fusilier goes up for a rebound against OD Wyatt.

Now that's a high five! Keith Warren jumps high for the opening tip-off.

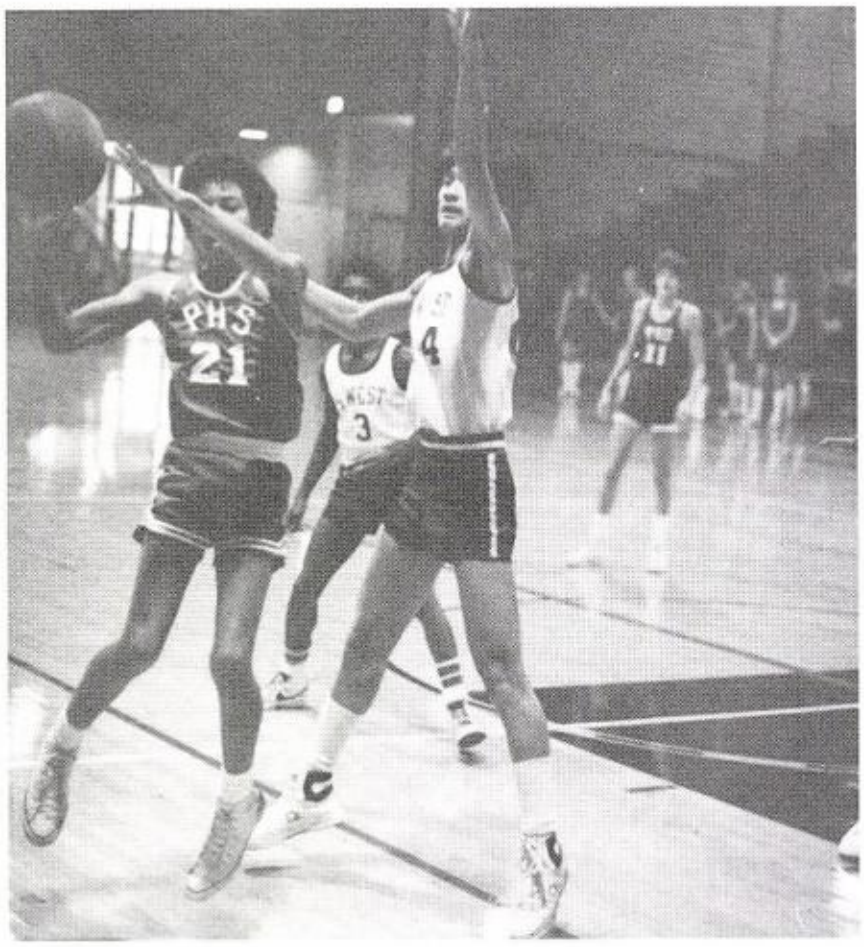
Freshmen reach for stardom
inal points create exciting games

It was Greg's first year to play on a basketball team, and he loved it. Their first game was against Southwest, and it was a good one! He got to play almost the whole game. On one play he dribbled down the court, raced up to the basket, and dunked it in before the Southwest players could even get down the court. On another play, Southwest had the ball and was just about to their end of the court when Greg snatched it away. It was amazing! By far, Greg was the best player of that game — especially after he made the winning basket.



After working the ball down the court, Olen Mitchell (12) prepares to pass to one of his teammates.

Anthony Hutcherson (21) works against Southwest's zone defense while Tim Ezell (11) looks on.

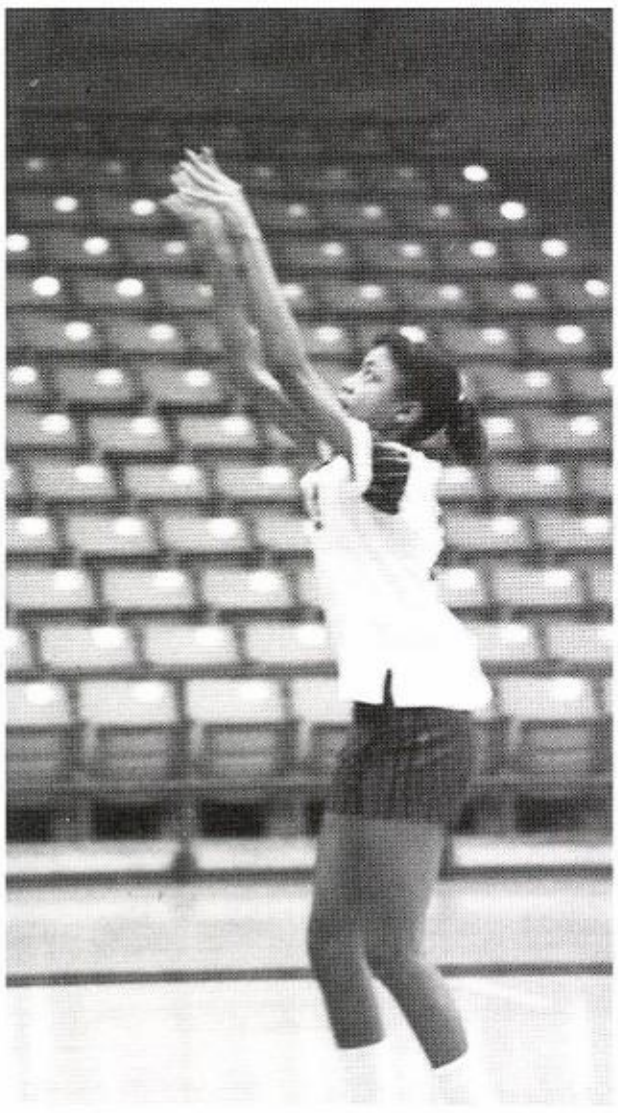
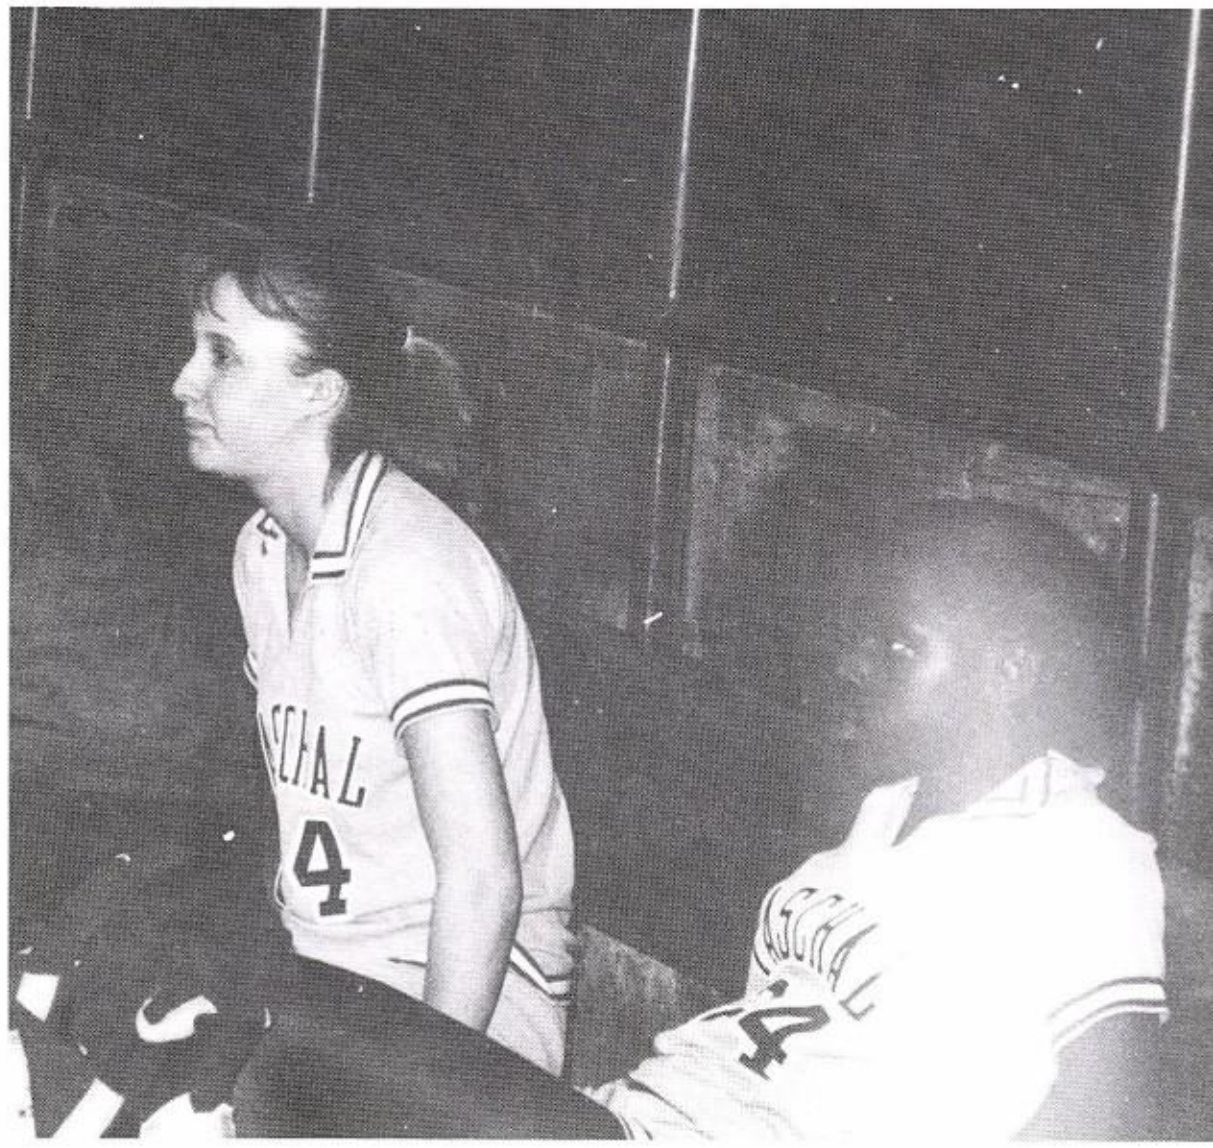
Lady Panthers go forward landing at the top

"All right, let's get out there and win," admonished Coach Stephens. With loud agreements of "O.K." the girls' varsity team trotted to the court. Making their way to their positions, the girls thought of all the hard work the team had put in during the first semester, of the new techniques and plays they had learned. Yet, the thing that stood out for most of them was the anticipation of what the season could be if each gave the best she had to offer. Suddenly, the referee's whistle blew. All other thoughts left their minds as their desire for victory took over.

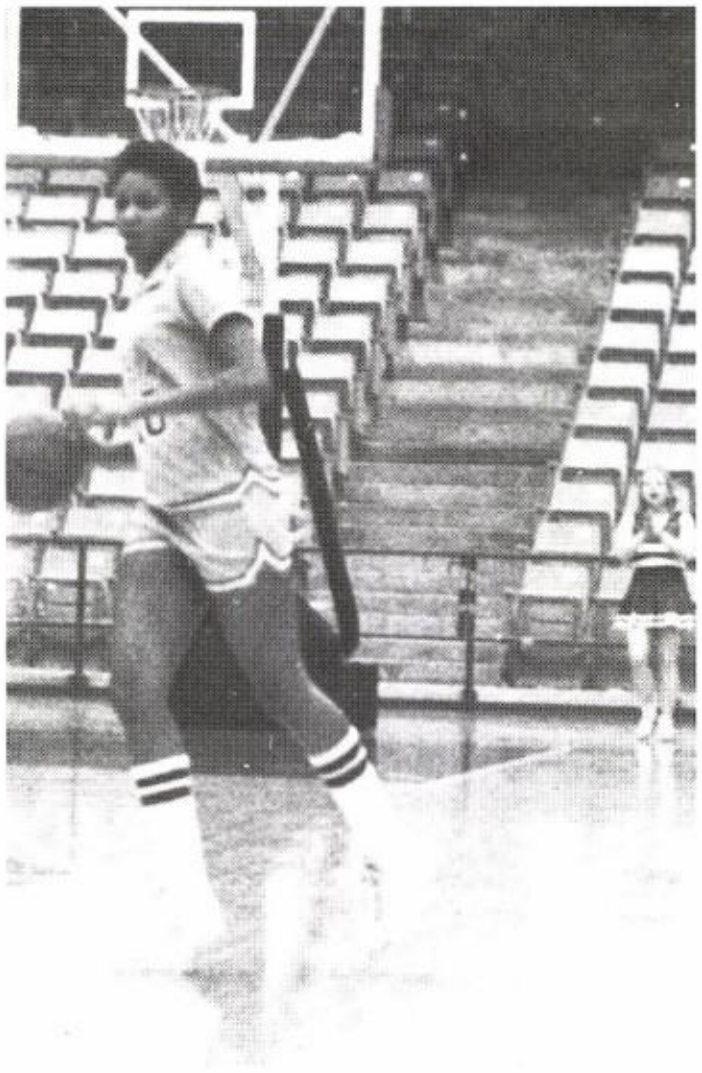
Lisa Lacy (14) throws the ball toward teammates Sharon Griffin (30) and Robbie Wesley (15).



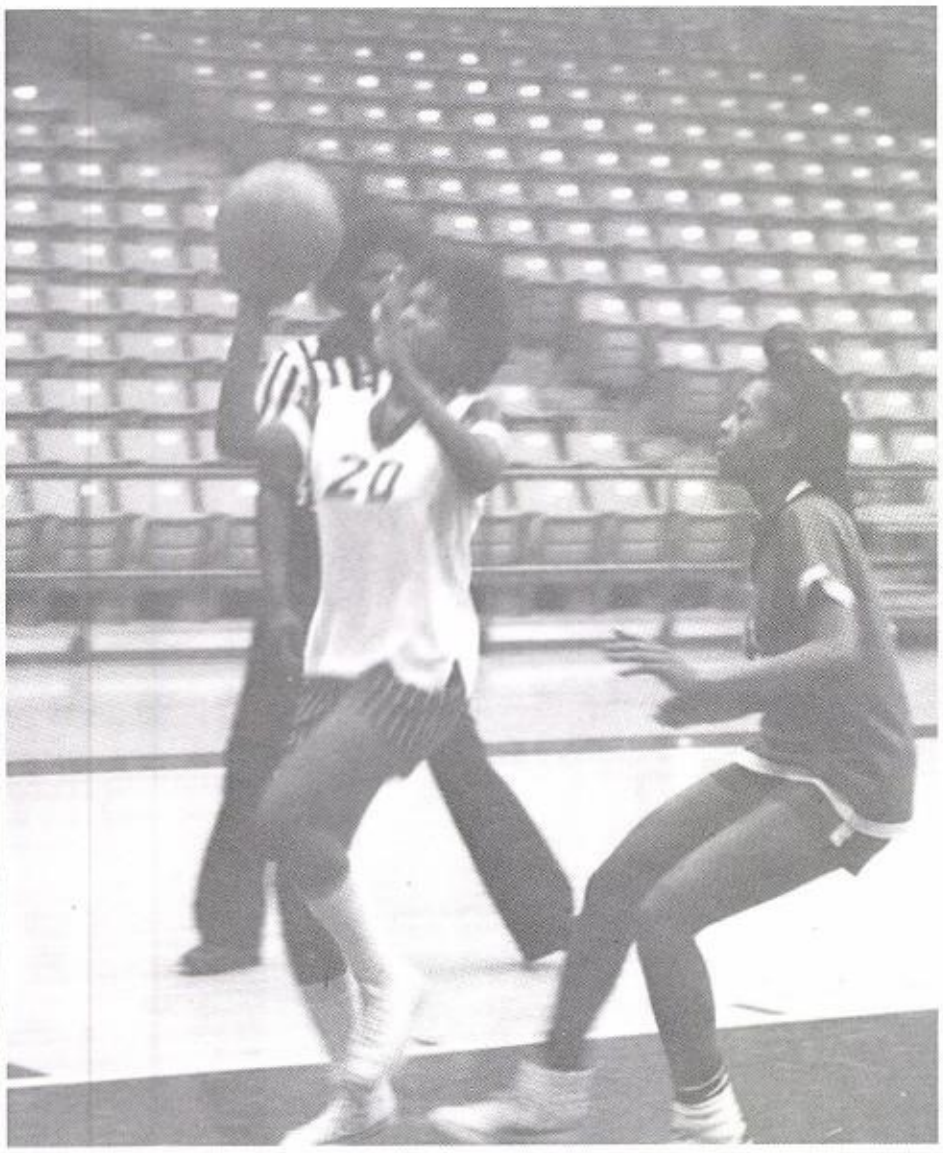
Stephanie Purvey (17) shoots for a perfect basket.



Kerrie Willis (54) and Kathy Broadus (24) take a break.

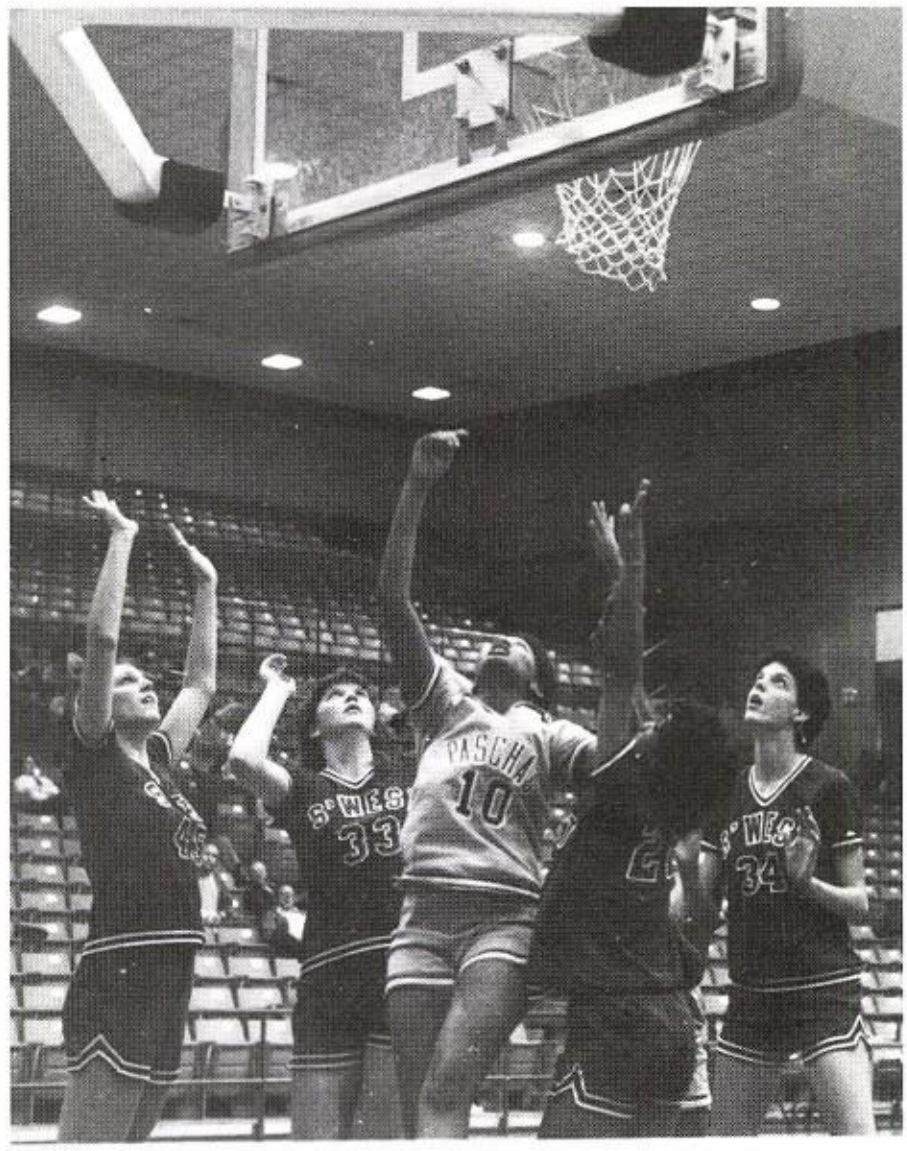


Kathy Brodus (24) prepares to rebound the ball after Tech's Cynthia Miller shoots the ball.



Tammy Gowan (20) catches a pass with a Dunbar player close behind.

Lisa Lacy (10) dribbles the ball on the court.



Lisa Lacy (10) hits the hoops for two points with Southwest players following close.

Round ballers shoot to 3rd place
Rising team blocks out opponents

The varsity squad roared out onto the court, ready for win number nine. Coached by Herb Stephens, the girls hoped for a victorious season and a first in district play. Assuming their positions, they thought of their eight and three season which placed them in a three way tie for second place. As they remembered past seasons, the squad realized that some of them had played together four years. Karen Dawson had improved her shooting abilities, Stephanie Purvey had excelled as a jump shooter, and Lisa Lacy had proved her leadership abilities to become captain of the 1984 team. As a whole, the team grew in skills and in the wide variety of talents that each member brought to the game. With the blast of the referee's whistle all other thoughts left their minds as thoughts of win number nine took over.

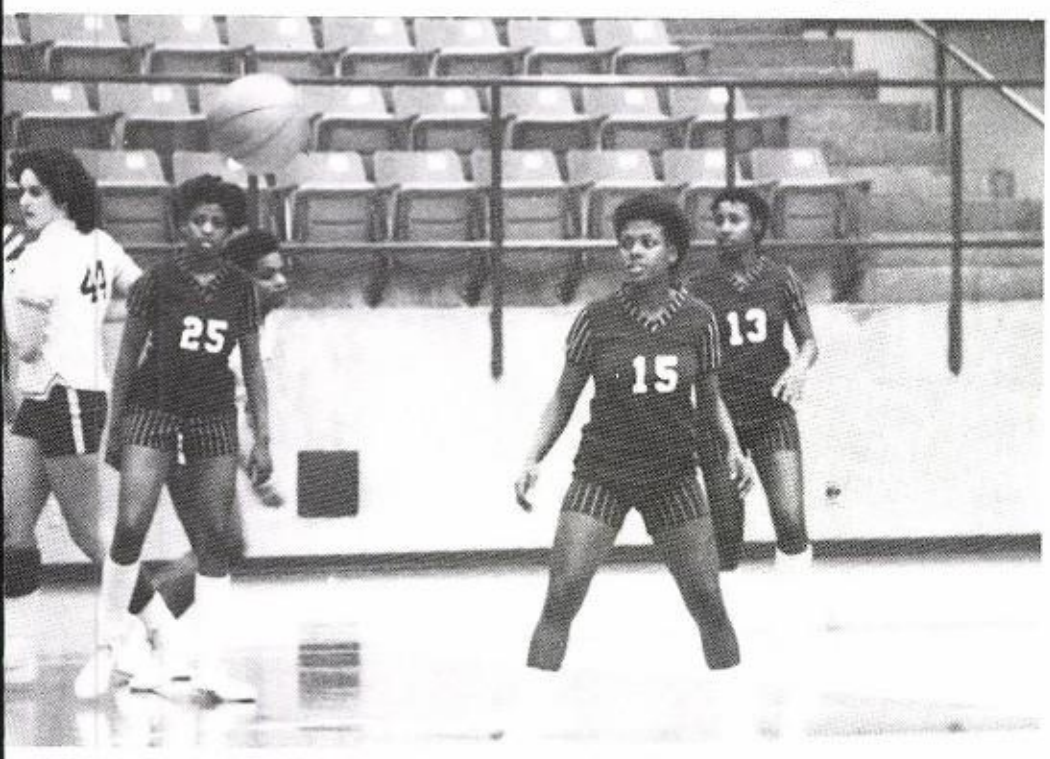
JV Shoots for the hoop Shots bring victory



Dear Leslie,

How have you been? Sorry, I haven't written, but I've been drilling for basketball. There are only nine of us on the squad. We have practice every day from three to five. I've learned jump shots, lay-ups, and how to play defense. Oh, guess what? Remember that cute guy in our English class? Well, he called and asked me out for Friday night; I can't go because I have a game that night! Maybe some other time. Well, I gotta go practice basketball.

Luv —
Angela

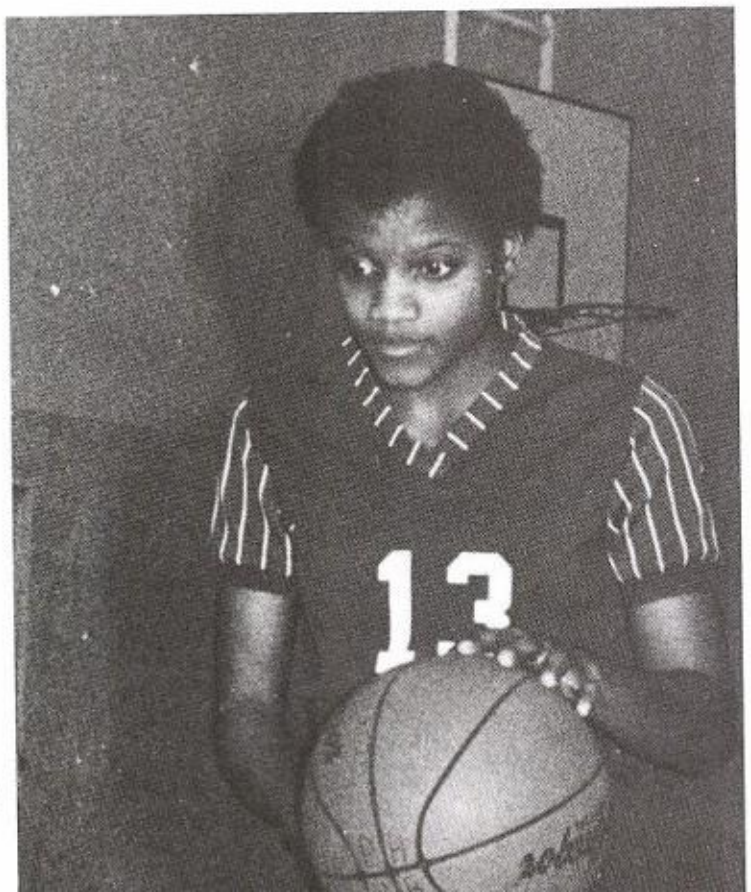
Angie Shaw (13) sets up a free throw.

The referee explains to Angie Shaw (14) and Michelle Helm (10) that Stephanie Perkins (34) needs to set up for a jump shot.



It was a scary feeling coming to such a big school. Being a freshman was hard enough, but learning all the players' names while adjusting to school was mind boggling. Things finally began to get easier.

During the freshman girls' basketball practice, Coach Shipler yelled, "Jump for the rebound, Michelle!" She quickly made for the ball and passed it on to Robbie who whipped around the players for a slam dunk. The team excitedly cheered Robbie as they ran down court.

Coach Shipler later commended the girls on their outstanding play and pointed out their weaknesses. The anxious girls went home, hoping that they would win the season's first game.

Seniors spark season success is a sure bet

February 1, a day he had longed for, was the first day for the baseball team to work out. Coach Crowder had eight returning lettermen: Tracy Dell, Eric Fox, Dennis Fox, Rich Frymire, Clayton Odom, Russ Schneider, Jeff Johnson, and Robbie Hogan who gave him the advantage of experience on this mostly senior bunch of ballplayers. As the team warmed up, the atmosphere was tense. Everyone wanted to find out how the team's first day would turn out.

Coach Crowder grabbed the fungo bat and told the team to take positions. As he hit outfield and infield, he was content that he was coaching the tightest infield in the area. The next question, "Can they still hit the ball?" was soon answered. He watched ball after ball fly into the next field, interrupting the JV's workout. At the end of the first day, Coach Crowder knew that he had the team that would win it all.

Clayton Odom prepares to return the ball.

Crack! His bat swung into the ball and it took off down the field. The shortstop took a dive for the ball and missed. The second baseman leaned over to catch it, and it flew past his glove.

As Mark watched his hit, his feet ran from base to base. He heard his teammates shouting him on. "Way to go Mark!" And he heard his friends at the game cheering and clapping also. He felt his adrenalin race as his legs pumped and he knew he was off to a great season.

Panthers at the Freshmen steal Bases

The outlook was a little dim for the Panther team that day;
The score was two to four with but one inning left to play.
With Gary safe on second, and Larry holding third,
Hope began to fill the air, and the roar of the crowd was heard.
Up to the plate stepped Clint, full of pride, and style and grace,
The mere mention of his name wiped the smiles off Heights' face.
As he stepped into the box, and clenched his bat in hate;
One could see his face grow stern as he pounded on the plate.
The pitcher quickened up his pace, and let the spitball go,
The atmosphere was shattered by the force of Clint's big blow.

Now in the halls at Paschal, the sun is shining bright,
The band is playing cheerfully and the Panthers' hearts are light.
Everyone remembers — teachers, fans, and all —
The day that Mighty Clint "tore the cover off the ball."

Clint Hall impatiently waits for the pitcher to release the ball.

This is baseball, not ballet! Randy Harper attempts to slide.

Troy Parker hopes the pitcher will pitch one over the plate soon.

The ultimate goal of every Paschal baseball player is to defeat Heights.

All the other girls on the team were also nervous. Paula Williams "Spiker" soon laid their fears to rest by demonstrating how she got her nickname.

Coach Marti Powell watched the ball being vollied from side to side. She eyed the ball falling toward the Arlington Heights' side; then the tension eased. With the last few seconds left in the game, Karen Dawson smashed it across the net. Paschal won with a score of 15-7, 15-12.

Team Girls Spikes opponents Set up shots

"Great game, girls! Tonja, Angela, you were both wonderful," congratulated Mrs. Blaylock and Ms. Powell as the freshman volleyball team came off the court after a tough game.

"You all need to shower and cool off. You played like a team, and that is what I like to see. Now you understand what I have been trying to tell you, don't you?", laughed Ms. Powell.

"Marti, those two, Tonja Hudlin and Angela Shaw, really are good! I'm looking forward to having them on my JV team next year," remarked Mrs. Blaylock. "Remember last year when you told me how lucky I was to be getting Maribel Martinez, Kerry Willis, Renee Henderson, and Bernadette Gross? You were certainly right. They are amazing! I know they will place high in their tournament."

"Well, I think that we have two really great teams, with many skilled players on them. I'm proud of our girls," replied Ms. Powell.

Another season had passed for Kim and the soccer team. She remembered all the goals she had set for herself during the grueling months of winter practices. She had so wanted to be remembered as an outstanding player: a leader on the team who strived to improve her playing skills of eye-ball coordination, kicking, and ball control. The four years of hard work paid off. During the game, she made four goals, and the team won the game. She had fulfilled all her ambitions and expectations. This had been a good year for Kim and the soccer team, one that would not soon be forgotten by anyone.

Is it true love? . . . One senior said it was. Having been on the tennis team had given her some favorite memories. One time the team went to the regionals in Abilene. She knew that it was going to be a tough match, since the best players in Texas were there. Therefore, she had to do her best and she and her teammates represented Paschal well.

When asked if there was any advice that could be given to a girl trying out for the team, the response was: don't give up, work hard, and set a goal. If these ideals can be achieved, then by the time senior year comes around, Martina Navratilova had better look out!

WANTED: Golfers who didn't hook into the rough, slice out of bounds, chip over the green, or take unexpected swims!

FOUND: Jeb Bradshaw, Jeff Williams, and David Dunson. These guys were seen playing golf at Colonial Country Club. Sources say they shot in the 70's for 18 holes. Their statistics would have been pretty good, if they hadn't played just nine holes. Rumors also had it that Brent Alford, David Stanley, Louis Candoli, Andy Spencer, and Beau Bondurant were caught at Pecan Valley sitting on the putting green by Coach Stevens. Somehow all the practice balls wound up in the duck pond.

SENTENCE: Excessive practice to sharpen skills that would result in a season of success and high district standing.

Girls golf doesn't putt around olfers drive for success

Coming up on the 18th hole.
She hoped for success; that was her goal.
She ever so skillfully retied her shoes,
Found new confidence, and knew, she couldn't lose.
She stepped on the teebox, picked up her wood,
Concentrated hard and swung the best she could.
The ball flew through the air — so far,
She just knew this hole would be under par.
She grabbed her caddy, raced to the green,
Eyed her opponent, who looked really mean.
While catching her breath, she walked to the ball;
She realized it was close — after all.
If she could make it with just one putt,
This would put her challenger in a rut.
All it took was that one stroke;
And to her surprise, the course record she broke.

Swimmers Stroke to state Varsity Sinks competition

To team members swimming conjured visions of Coach Sherree Wood screaming to quit pulling on the lane rope and to get going on the 500 warm up. Her mention of a meet added an extra touch of enthusiasm and quickened the pace on the 200 IM.

Being on the team was an unforgettable experience. Swimmers suffered everything from chlorine bleached hair to watching Mark Jardine break his arm while attemtping a back dive. All unpleasantries aside, no swimmer forgot the day he won the race he'd been swimming since his freshman year or dropped those dreaded two seconds that made the difference between Regionals and State.

The challenge was at hand. Afte all the long hard years of practice Julie Whitley had finally made it t the State Gymnastics Championshi Competition. This was the contest o winners. Julie had gone through to much physical preparation and men tal discipline to come this far and b defeated by another gymnast. Sh had overcome her fears of falling o the balance beam and bein humiliated by the other gymnast She pushed herself past her ow limits and executed athleti movements that required strengt and quickness as well as the flexibil ty and grace of a dancer. Juli realized that this was no longer dream. This was the goal she ha strived for — the true test an ultimate challenge. She would tr for first place.

As she looked back at one of her favorite high school year, the thing that stood out was being a cheerleader. Cheering for her school not only got her involved in school activities but also meant acquaintance with a wide variety of people. After being accepted by a panel of National Cheerleading Association Judges, she spent many hours practicing, preparing herself for the year. The long hours of hard work proved to be well worth the effort because she gained both friendships and experience. She hoped to continue as varsity cheerleader, too. Of course her memories of being a cheerleader would never fade away!

Organizations

Glimpses of togetherness

PSOP members Linda Stemple and Karen Standerfer cheer the team on to a victory at a football game.

Academic clubs show prowess

Where is the solution to the tremendous horrendous problem of scientific method found?

What can be done about the confusing Pythagorean theorum?

Where can one discover the answer to questions concerning everything from baseball to Bach?

How can one participate in an all-expense paid shopping spree for Christmas toys?

Where can one be rewarded for long laborious hours of study?

The answer to all the above questions was the same: the academic clubs. If these organizations didn't boost grades and heighten an understanding of such subjects as science and student government, then they surely remedied a lack of jocular activity by having wild parties at the Pizza Inn. These clubs weren't overlooked in the academic shuffle.

The front hall was busy as students frantically set up their displays for Club Day. Members of the Spanish, French and German clubs mentioned that their clubs participated in language fairs which helped them to understand the culture that produced the languages they had studied. Wendy brought up the Spanish Club's annual chili supper while Lori elaborated on the German Club's involvement in the Oktoberfest. Robby sat quietly behind the table smiling, because he knew nothing could top the Latin Club's Christmas feast. Sherlicia mentioned the Ebony Club's banner for the homecoming parade and their annual program in February to celebrate black history. Several members of Latinos in Action brought up their club's fund raising activities, such as the car wash and dances. Kathy talked about the cultural parties sponsored by the American Field Service. As Club Day came to a close, the students removed the tables and gathered up their displays. All looked forward to the activities ahead of them.

Paula found herself facing the dilemma of deciding which classes to take. Ever since she could remember, she had been in her church choir, and almost as long, she had been taking violin and flute lessons. This made the choice among band, orchestra, and choir especially difficult. Paula thought that maybe she was ready for a change and considered Vagabonds, a drama club, which would give her a chance to be in the school play. Maybe she could give art a try. After thinking about her choices and talking with her parents, Paula finally found the solution to her problem. Taking a seventh period class would allow her to fit in all her required classes and give her time for some electives!

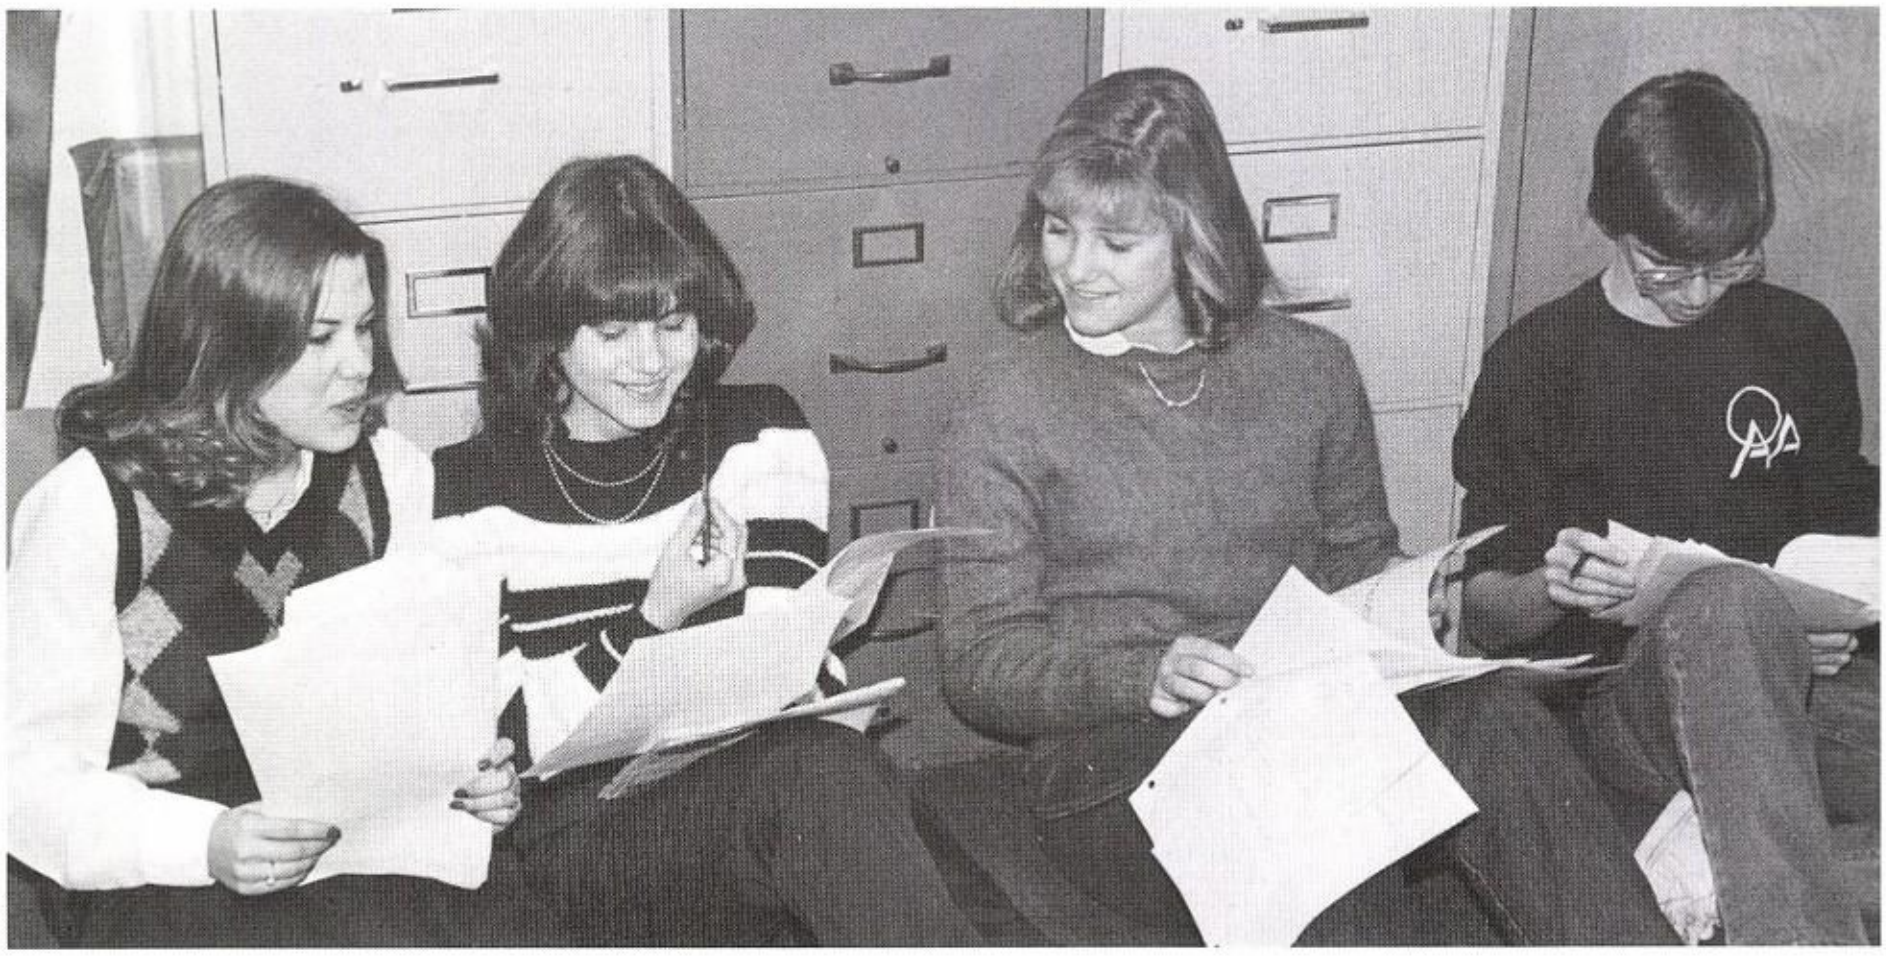
Creativity generates ideas



When the year started, Chris decided she wanted to be on a staff that published stories about her school. After doing some investigating, she found that there were staffs for sales, the PANTHER, the VIGNETTE, and the PANTHERETTE. The sales staff provided bookkeeping and took care of all the money for the PANTHER staff which produced the school annual. Every few weeks the PANTHERETTE staff wrote and published the newspaper which kept the student body posted on the latest issues. The VIGNETTE, a literary magazine with original art work, photography, poems, and short stories, showed the efforts of students. Chris didn't know which publication to choose! She did know that whichever she decided to try for, she would have fun being on it.

Spirit reaches its peak

"Stop, look, and listen. Here comes the mighty Panther . . ." These words greeted Lori, who hurried down the overcrowded aisle and tried to avoid getting in the way of PSOP members carrying Rascal. She had had to finish totaling magazine sales in Senior Activities and had asked her friends to save her a seat behind the PAWS. Relieved to see some familiar faces, she sank into the empty seat. Enthusiasm filled the auditorium as the cheerleaders and other students applauded for the football team when they strolled down the aisle. After the drill team danced to "Wanna Be Startin' Something," the excitement swelled for the spirit competition between the "fearful" freshmen, "sprightly" sophomores, "jovial" juniors, and "sensational" seniors. The seniors won, of course. Lori and the student body stood to sing the Alma Mater and watched the football team leave in their traditional manner. As the band continued to play, chills went up and down Lori's spine. She anticipated a spirited school year.

Take this job and love it!

After third period, Londa Jones and Maré Cauble walked to their cars. Neither was returning to school. Maré's school day was over, for she was one of many students in a work program. Londa, on the other hand, was a multi-campus student. She spent half her day at Paschal and then went to Southwest for fashion design. Londa found it hard to adjust to the differences in the school campuses. Both girls gained experiences in their careers through vocational programs.

Winners catch the eye of classmates

Three freshman girls lingered by their lockers during passing period.

"There he is," exclaimed one."

"Who?" asked another.

"That cute senior guy I see every day."

The third girl joined the conversation. "Oh, that's Clayton Odom. He's in my computer math class. He's real smart and always helps me with my programs. He's so nice, too."

"So that's him. I heard he's up for Mr. Paschal," said the first girl. "Everyone says he's friendly and outgoing."

The second girl added, "I bet he wins it. I know I would have voted for him if I were a senior. He not only gets along with students; he gets along well with teachers. Everybody likes him."

The third girls said, "He's a great athlete, too. My brother plays baseball with him and he says that Clayton is one of the best players in the district. He's been on the varsity team since his sophomore year."

"Shhh! He's right there."

"He smiled at me."

"No he didn't, he smiled at me. I'm the one in his computer math class."

"He smiled at all of us, okay?"

"Okay, but we better get to class. The bell is about to ring."

The three freshman went their separate ways to class, but all were thinking about the same thing: That cute senior guy who had just smiled at them — Mr. Paschal of 1984, Clayton Odom.

Meanwhile, farther down the hall, a couple of guys were walking to class. They caught a glimpse of a blur dashing by. "Hey, Connie, wait up!" said one.

"Sorry, guys, I can't be late for my LC meeting," she replied as she ran on.

Connie Johnson could always be found somewhere around Paschal.

She always had to get to school early or miss her lunch period for a meet She stayed there until all hours of night working to make ann deadlines. If she weren't at school, was probably presiding at a Un High School Council meeting since was the president, or maybe she doing homework since she had vanced classes.

The second guy thought out l "When does that busy girl ever h time for herself?"

"She's used to hectic schedules," the first guy. "She's always friendl everyone, and she takes the time t others know she cares."

Connie's considerate and thoug nature did not go unnoticed, for classmates rewarded her by elec her as a favorite finalist all four y Homecoming Queen, and the hig honor of all — Miss Paschal.

Favorites duck into popularity

As the ballots for freshman favorite were being passed out, he thought about who to vote for. He scanned the list of outstanding candidates. Cogdell Bradshaw stood out as the best male nominee. As one of Cogdell's many good friends, he remembered riding mopeds with him in Overton Park, playing golf and going to the mall. He knew Cogdell was on the "A" honor roll and was also a student council alternate. He concluded that Cogdell would be perfect for favorite.

Now that the boys' race had been decided, it was time to select the girl to vote for. Once again he scanned the list. He had a difficult time but decided that Nancy Wright would be the best candidate. He remembered going to see her perform in Dance Concepts and Jazz Company. He also remembered going to her ranch with a bunch of friends to ride horses. He knew that all her ski trips to the lake and the mountains didn't stop her from keeping her grades up. When he turned in his ballot, he could feel proud that he helped to elect Cogdell Bradshaw and Nancy Wright freshman favorites for 1984.

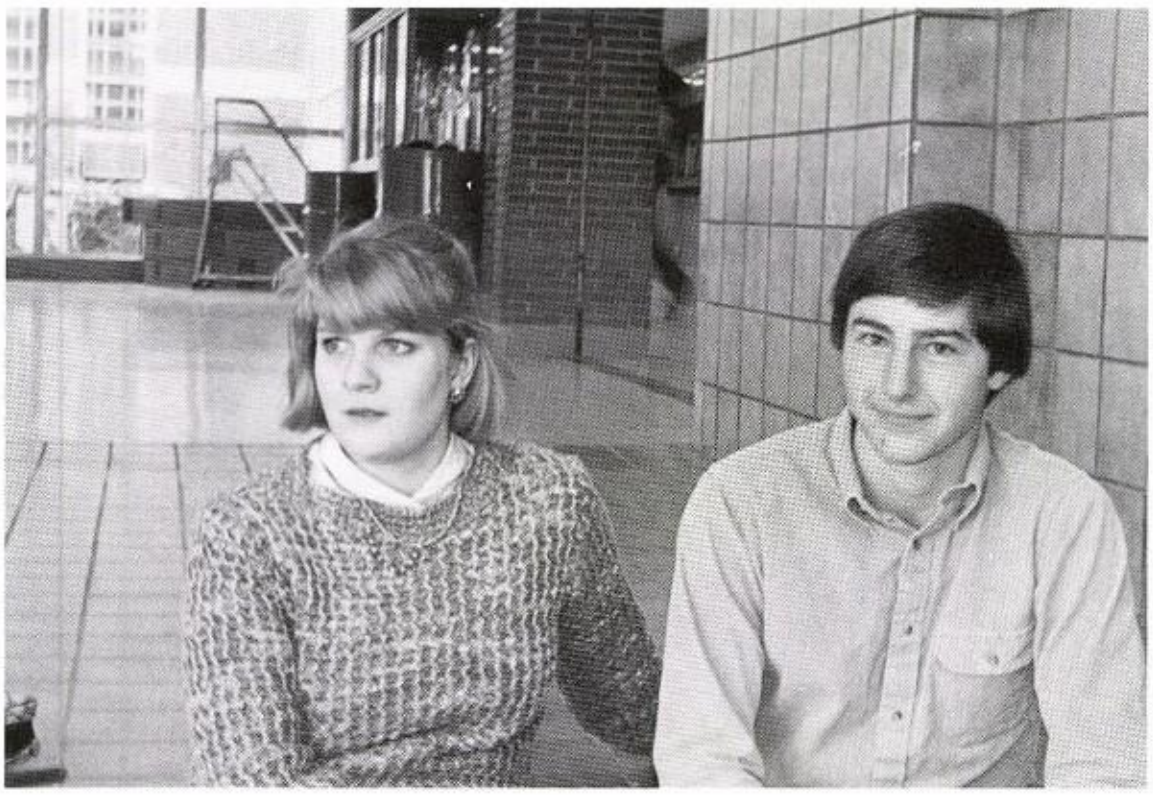
Finalists have varied interests

While the four finalists for freshman favorite nervously waited for photographers to arrive, they wondered which of their characteristics helped them become candidates. Describing her as outgoing and energetic, Lee Norman talked about Cherisse Gibson's interests in such sports as basketball and softball. He knew she always participated in school activities and had been elected by her classmates to represent them on LC. Shawn Barnard mentioned Kristen Harris's interests in water skiing and shopping. Kristen was active in the Latin Club and enjoyed seeing scary movies and talking on the telephone. Kristen in turn pointed out Lee Norman's modesty and his abilities at playing both football and guitar. She also knew he maintained a "B" average and was a student council representative. Cherisse quietly pointed out that Shawn, also a good student with a "B" average, enjoyed basketball and riding horses. When the photographers finally arrived, the four finalists , Lee, Kristen, Cherisse, and Shawn quickly adjusted their clothes and lined up for that all-important picture.

Connie Johnson reigns as Homecoming Queen.

Court reigns for a week

The girls chosen for the 1983 Homecoming Court are Robin Dishman, Jenny Edwards, Suzanne Nelson, Jenny Brown, Natalie Scarborough.



Mark and Gena: NMS

The University of Texas representative looked over two outstanding PSAT scores. He knew Mark Rubin and Gena Kirkland were National Merit Scholars who could probably excel in any field they chose. Mark, interested in math and sciences, loved to work on computers. Gena's favorite field was English.

The college representative wanted to encourage the two to attend UT, but he saw that Mark's first college choice was Princeton University, while Gena's was Georgetown University in Washington, D.C. "Oh, well," he thought, "maybe UT will be their second choice."

McCreath: DAR

At 11:00 a.m., a hush fell over the dimly lit classroom as a committee of teachers came to order. "What does it take to qualify for the Daughters of the American Revolution Good Citizen Award?" asked one teacher.

"The student must have leadership and dependability qualities, as well as patriotism," another said.

Still another teacher spoke out, "What about Brian McCreath? He's been nominated on many occasions for his writing and his musical talents."

This particular name triggered a brainstorm. Brian had already participated in the National Council of English Teachers' writing contest and had received a 1 rating in two solo and ensemble contests in 1982. Brian, for the past two years, had played in the All City Band, and for the 83-84 season he was first chair trumpet. After much discussion and a final vote, the teachers made their decision. The DAR award would go to Brian McCreath.

Panther Pride prevails

Loyalty, responsibility, leadership, courtesy, eagerness, enthusiasm towards learning, cooperation . . . these were the qualities that teachers looked for when nominating and voting for Panther Pride students. Many of these students through their extracurricular activities demonstrated an interest in Paschal. Others were chosen simply because of their cheerful attitude or their creativeness. Whatever the reason, teachers felt that these were model students, the students that made teaching worthwhile. Little did they realize that lurking beneath the surface was . . . a touch of the rebel.

Decathlon enters competition

Imagine being invited to become a member of a team that competes academically against some of the best scholastic teams in the state, then in the nation, and, if you're really good, in the world at the 1984 Summer Olympics. That team is the Academic Decathlon Team. Competition starts locally with members knowledgeable in ten areas: economics, fine art, music, literature, social science, mathematics, speech, composition, science, and finally, the topic of the Olympic from its origin in Greece through its modern version with competition shifting from country to country. Should the team win the state competition, each member receives $4000. The highest scorer in an event receives an additional $4000. Not bad pay for a mental marathon, is it?

Stars and stripes forever! Well, stars at least. Ti-fany Edwards and Charita Ray never knew taking down the flag could be so much fun.

Class of 1984 says

You finally made it! You were a real-life, honest-to-goodness, big, bad senior. College always seemed so far off, but believe it or not, and like it or not, this was it — graduation year. Freshman thoughts of, "I hope my hair stays curled at least until lunch," or "I hope I don't get lost," changed (in four short years) to "I hope we have a senior skip day soon," and "So what if I'm a slob; I'm a senior!"

Privileges came with seniority. Instead of looming in the distance, off campus lunches, senior girls' line dance, senior prom, and other "senio only" activities suddenly became reali ty. Events became sentimental: it wa your last homecoming, your last foot ball game, your last pep rally at Paschal Thoughts turned to life after high school, and plans and decisions were made. Graduation came and high school life came to a close. The class o 1984 made its mark at Paschal, as wel as friendships and memories that wil last a lifetime.

Scott: Involved

As Scott Baker sauntered into the new gym, he remembered all those years of practice when he hoped to play in a band. While he set up his drums, he thought about the things he did when he wasn't practicing. Over the summer, he spent his time travelling to Arkansas and the Appalachia Mountains with his church youth group. He also remembered the hours spent practicing for cheerleading. Once school started, he spent almost all of his spare time memorizing lines for the fall musical, South Pacific. Scott came back to reality when the students came into the gym to listen to The Agents . . . and Scott.

Marco: Immigrant

By just talking to Marco Rosales, one couldn't tell that he moved to Fort Worth only four years ago from Mexico City. Not only could he not speak any English, but he also had to adapt to a new culture. "It was really scary," commented Marco.

It was particularly difficult for Marco to be placed in regular English speaking classes. Only in his Spanish class could he speak his native language; however, Mrs. Newland spoke Spanish with him for about a week. Gradually, he became active in his favorite sport, soccer, where he picked up more English. Soon, he had even mastered good old American slang. Marco hadn't stayed scared long.

Juniors! eleven years down and one to go!

The long awaited days of becoming an upperclassman finally arrived! The junior year brought excitement and such privileges as a five period day. It also brought lines.

That's right, lines! Students stood in line to see the counselor to change to that Algebra 3-4/Trig. class. Some waited in line to get college handbooks. Others stood in line to sign up for the PSAT to find out if they were as smart as they had thought. Some lines were even fun — such as the one to order pictures from dances, or the one to sign up for Powder Puff, or the one to buy a class ring.

When the year ended, they were experts in standing in line; however, these lines weren't what was important. It was the result of having been in line. Sharing peeks at dance pictures, bragging about PSAT scores, crying about Powder Puff bruises: these were the things that made the junior year.

Off the fork, behind the gums, watch out, stomach; here i comes. Stacey Jennings and Burnadette Jones enjoy lunc at Casa Bonita.

Did you see that good-looking guy? Linda Rambo, Trac Bell, and Kerry Church admire the view from a ferry boat i 1849 Village.

Ken: winner

As soon as he got out of the pool, he looked at the scoreboard and saw that he had won by swimming the hundred yard breast stroke in one minute flat! He heard the officials call "Ken Strassburger . . . first place!" He knew this success came from hard work that included lifting weights and long daily workouts at the pool. He had added one more medal to his other accomplishments which included qualifying for the United States National Junior Olympic Swimming Championship West. For this competition Ken had willingly shaved the hair off his head and legs! His daily schedule included swimming at TWC from 5:45-7:15, going to school from 8:00-2:00, then going back to the pool at TCJC from 4:00-6:00. On any day of the week Ken Strassburger could be found splashing in a pool!

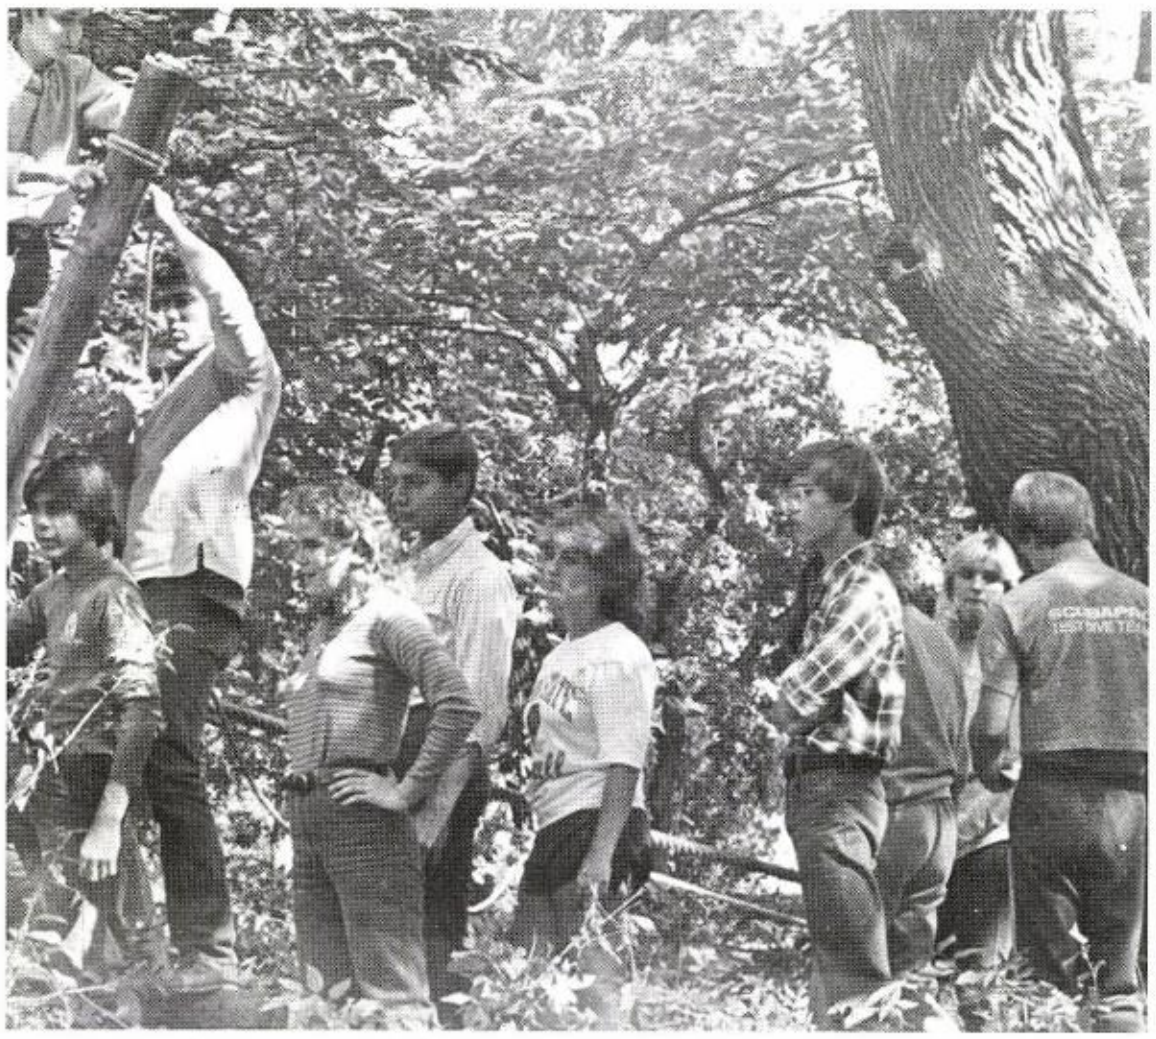
OAA: escape

Mark remembered signing up for the class last spring. "Oh," he thought, "it's just another blow-off class." But was he wrong! Outdoor Adventure and Awareness was not as easy as he expected. Under the supervision of Bob Reed, OAA taught students skills such as firebuilding, camping, and canoeing. Mark participated in self-trust events where he had to close his eyes and fall back into the arms of another student. He even remembered fun things like building a monkey bridge at Forest Park.

Mark expected the class to be made primarily of boys and was surprised at the number and ability of the girls in the class. They put as much effort into the projects, reports, and tests as Mark. He concluded that OAA taught him many survival techniques that would be useful to him for the rest of his life.



Bart Blair, John Shibley, Victor Flores, Kathy Tesar, Pat Walsh, Denise McLaughlin, Brian McCreath, and Jackie Owens wait in line to go across the bridge they built.

Best in the mix — class of '86

The freshman year seemed to have slipped away — there was no more searching for the 3rd floor elevator key or putting up with "fish" jokes. Having reached the 10th grade status, a full-fledged sophomore knew what he was about to do was wrong, but did it anyway. With the sophomore year came an unprecedented, unexpected freedom. For the first time there was no need to worry about who would drive, even if the only transportation was Mom's old baby blue station wagon which was affectionately dubbed the "cruise mobile." There was the first job, even if the hours were only during Christmas rush. The sophomore year was simply not the second year of high school; it was a collage of different people and places.

Mark: biker

Would the school day never end? It was 2:03 and the bell was late. Everyone in Mark Spoonemore's period five math class was restless. Most of his sophomore classmates were ready to end the day and head for home, but for Mark the day was just beginning. He rode the bus to Wilkerson Greines Activity Center for his daily workout with the swim team; after that he headed for home so he could ride his dirt bike. This might not sound like a time consuming hobby, but he worked out with his trainer on Tuesdays and Thursdays and on weekends. A lot could be done in four days, and Mark was well on his way to accomplishing the title of National Dirt Bike Champion. By the time Mark finally found a few minutes to relax in his schedule, the day had ended.

Margie: vet

As Margie Gilreath held the Yorkshire terrier down for his rabies shot, she wondered if it would be another busy day at the Westcreek Animal Clinic. She had to hurry and finish with the Yorkie, because she had to help the doctor with a surgery in thirty minutes. Margie was getting used to surgery, since she had been working there for five months.

If Margie wasn't busy giving the animals water and food, she was working at the reception desk, answering the phone. Finally, it was time to close, so she checked on the animals one more time and went home, exhausted, but happy. It had been one busy day!

Freshmen tackle campus life

As Melissa got out of her mother's car, she stared in amazement at the bright purple doors of her new school. "It's so big!" she thought to herself, remembering her middle school. Walking across the street towards the school, she saw a group of her old friends who were catching up on all the gossip from the summer. "All the guys certainly did get cute," one of them was saying; but Melissa already had her eyes on an upperclassman who had just walked by and winked at her.

After going to homeroom and getting her schedule, Melissa went to typing and sat down. She was intimidated when she realized that there were no other freshmen in the class. She overcame her shyness when she saw who had sat next to her. "Hi, there. I'm Jeff. What's your name?" It was the same guy she had seen before school! There couldn't have been a more perfect way to start off a new year at a new school.

High school

High school: The very word gave me a certain charge. High school was that big step — the building across town that my middle school friends and I dreamed about. High school meant special privileges and more responsibilities. It used to seem so far away. I remember thinking that the moment I walked through those purple doors that I'd be an adult. It wasn't what I expected. Along with the privileges came new rules and a whole new way of doing things. I think that even from the beginning, I knew that it would be a step up, for on the first day our biology teacher gave us scissors to use. The scissors had real points! No more blunt edges for me. I thought to myself, "Baby . . . I have arrived."

Trevino: boxer

What do freshmen do outside school? Gene wondered, so she found a few 9th graders and asked. All they could say was, "Talk to Danny Trevino." Her curiosity had clearly taken over. Gene looked up his schedule. Finding him in homeroom, she arranged a time to interview him.

They finally met on Thursday. She asked him, "What do you do that's so interesting?" All he said was, "I box." Well that didn't say it all. Working out three hours a day at Central Boxing Club he worked toward becoming a professional boxer. Winner of the State AAU title for two years and of trophies from the Fort Worth Junior Boxing Association, Danny Trevino was already on his way.

Early risers face busy day

R-R-r-r-ing! It was six AM, August 29 and time to get up. She stumbled out of bed and got ready for work. Her first day of high school in ten years made her as nervous as she had been on her first day as a freshman. She dressed quickly and prepared for the day's busy activities. As she drove to school, she tried to remember all the answers to the questions that her freshman homeroom might ask, because she was just as new as they. Finally, she arrived at school. First, she had to go to the office to get handbooks for her homeroom, some class count forms, and her handbook of rules for teachers. She then stopped by the lounge for a quick swallow of coffee. The bell rang! She had to get to her room, for she knew that it was going to be a hectic day.

It's fantastic! The tires are sturdy, the brakes work . . . Mrs. Marge Philp closely examines the basketball teams' raffle bicycle during a PTA meeting.

Mrs. Cynthia Kanaga is caught taking a Coke break from a busy day.

Ms. Marti Powell, Mrs. Norma Headrick, Mr. David Helbing, Mr. Floyd Earwood, and Mr. Walter Dansby discuss their teams' strategies.

Lasko: Service

Mrs. Suzanne Lasko finished the lasagne for her teenagers Gary Miles and Sharon Lasko. While she put it in the oven, the phone rang. The caller reminded her of an administration council meeting the following afternoon.

As she continued her Sunday cooking chores, she recalled how she became so busy. One day she was teaching college students and felt she wasn't doing enough. Soon she could be found at PTA meetings and events with her children. From local school activities, she progressed to campaigning for the school board. Following her election, Lasko faced decisions that had an impact on the educational system.

The oven buzzer brought her back to the real world — a combination of family life and community service.

80's: Computer age

The sun had just risen when Mr. John Hamilton prepared the computer math room for its busy day. The addition of an Apple IIe to the seven TRS-80's and four printers indicated the importance of computer skills. A trip down the hall to check other hardware took him to the room where Mrs. Letha Wallace taught computer literacy. Across the hall, he checked a graphic display on the free enterprise computer. After this quick survey, he hurried back to the math room to where students were at work on the machines of the 80's, the computer.

Durham: physics

At the beginning of the year when Mr. James Durham walked into room 144 at 8:00, he wasn't sure how he'd like teaching physics. On his regular job at General Dynamics he worked as an Aircraft Mission Analyst. A part of the new adopt-a-school program, he was the first businessman-teacher. If the experiment worked, GD would provide more people the next year.

As the year progressed, Mr. Durham felt the students benefited from his experience in industry. He helped the community and re-learned some forgotten knowledge in the process. When asked if he enjoyed teaching, he said, "I don't like the necessity of giving grades. I don't think learning occurs well in an atmosphere where the teacher-student relationship turns into a power play. Teachers sometimes use this to get students to do homework, take tests, and listen to lectures." During the year, the feeling he enjoyed most was doing something useful and passing on some of the ideas that he had learned.

English: for speakers of other languages

When Seyha Yong and seventy-eight other students registered, they entered the new program, English for Speakers of Other Languages. Because he didn't know what to expect, he was frightened, but excited. He couldn't speak English fluently. His first period class was filled with classmates eager to help him understand the teacher. His sixth period algebra was the class he was most anxious about. Seyha had to "move" out to a class where there was no one to translate. In a seat near the front, he watched the other students come into the room. He noticed it wasn't very difficult to understand the teacher. Even though it was hard talking to the other students, he found them friendly and interested in his background. The bell rang. The first day of school was over. Seyha smiled to himself thinking what a good school year this was going to be!

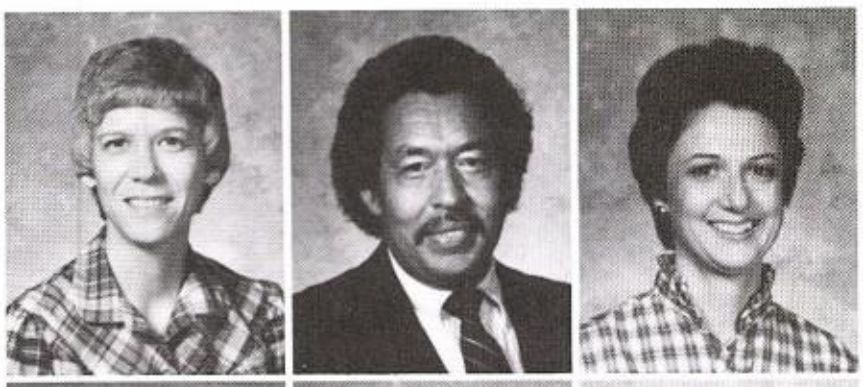
Teachers are parents too

All in the family

When Kristen Flores arrived at school with brothers Christopher and Victor, she realized she had forgotten her money to buy an annual. She didn't panic or rush home; she just went to room 246 and got her money. What was her secret? Her mother, Mrs. Sharon Flores, taught at PHS. If she forgot to get a permission slip signed or lunch money, her mother was there. The Floreses weren't the only students with a mother teaching in the school they attended. Others with the same advantages and, perhaps, disadvantages included: Freddie Wilson, Richard Grant, Clay Wood, Lisa Sullivan, Jennifer Peacock, Keith Barnes and Shannon Lindsay, whose mother, Mrs. Cecilee Boone also had her mother, Mrs. Oleta Cope, available for back-up — in the attendance office.



Miss Marti Powell – Athletics, Physical Education. Mr. Clyde Prior – Science. Mrs. Sara Pursley – Vocational Education; Future Homemakers of America-Home Economics Related Occupations.

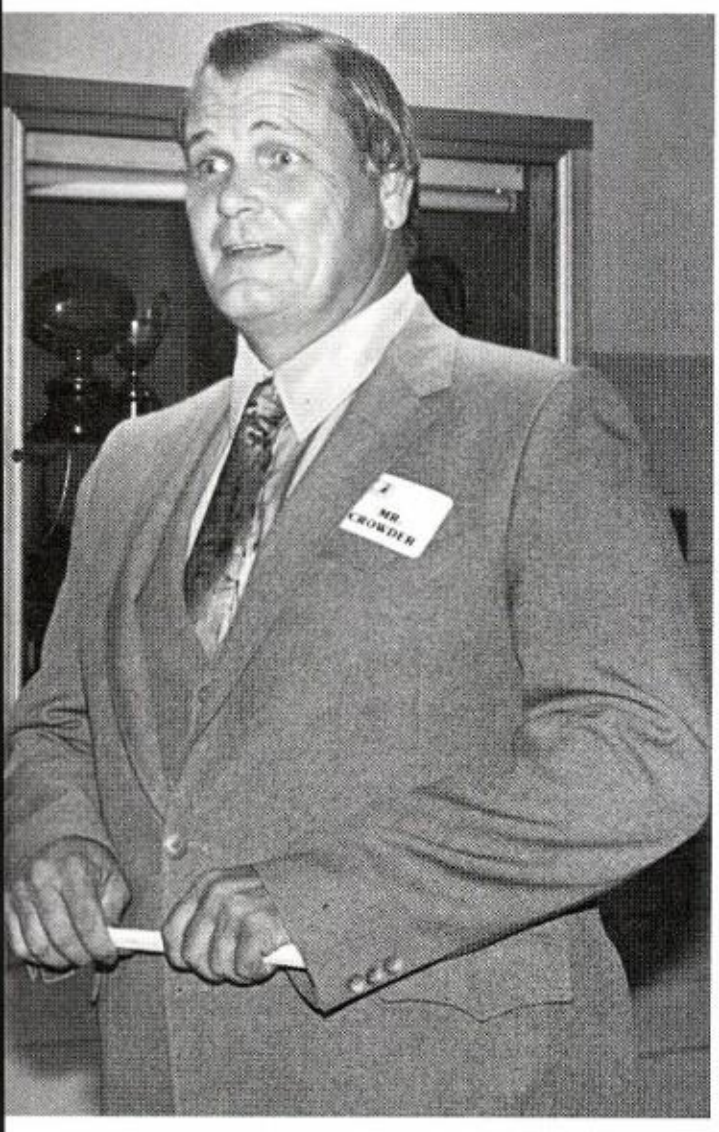
Who me? I won a million dollars? Mr. Jimmie Crowder greets parents at Open House.



Vocational options increase

As she stepped out of the car, Donna Hicks realized there was a busy year ahead of her. Thoughts of beginning something new increased her excitement. She was glad Paschal offered such vocational courses as: VOE and Industrial Co-operative Training which provided "a better opportunity for a better job." Donna felt she was preparing for her future.

When her first and second periods were over, she started to get nervous about beginning her new VOE job. Then the moment was at hand; she entered the building with great expectations. She was glad to be involved in VOE. She knew her future would be successful — thanks to her school.

Garrett: part of history

For the past 21 years, through all the constant — Mrs. Audrey Garrett. She has seen hair and clothing styles come and go. She has seen the majority of our faculty come and some of it go. She has seen the staff of five maids dwindle to just herself — and now she is called a custodian! She remembers past homecomings. All the homerooms would be decorated and there would be senior, junior, sophomore, and freshman prizes. She once saw a homeroom with a body in a coffin. Homecoming was always fun, but there was a lot of cleaning up! Yet, that same old Panther spirit stayed at pep rallies and homecoming! Through all the changes, Mrs. Garrett has endured and has been part of Paschal's history.

Have a lunch and a smile. Mrs. Ricky Herrera serves a plate lunch with a smile.

Mr. James Barton – Custodian. Mrs. Shirlean Benson – Cafeteria. Miss Louise Bush – Cafeteria. Mr. Wiley Clark – Custodian. Mr. Anthony Everitt – Custodian.

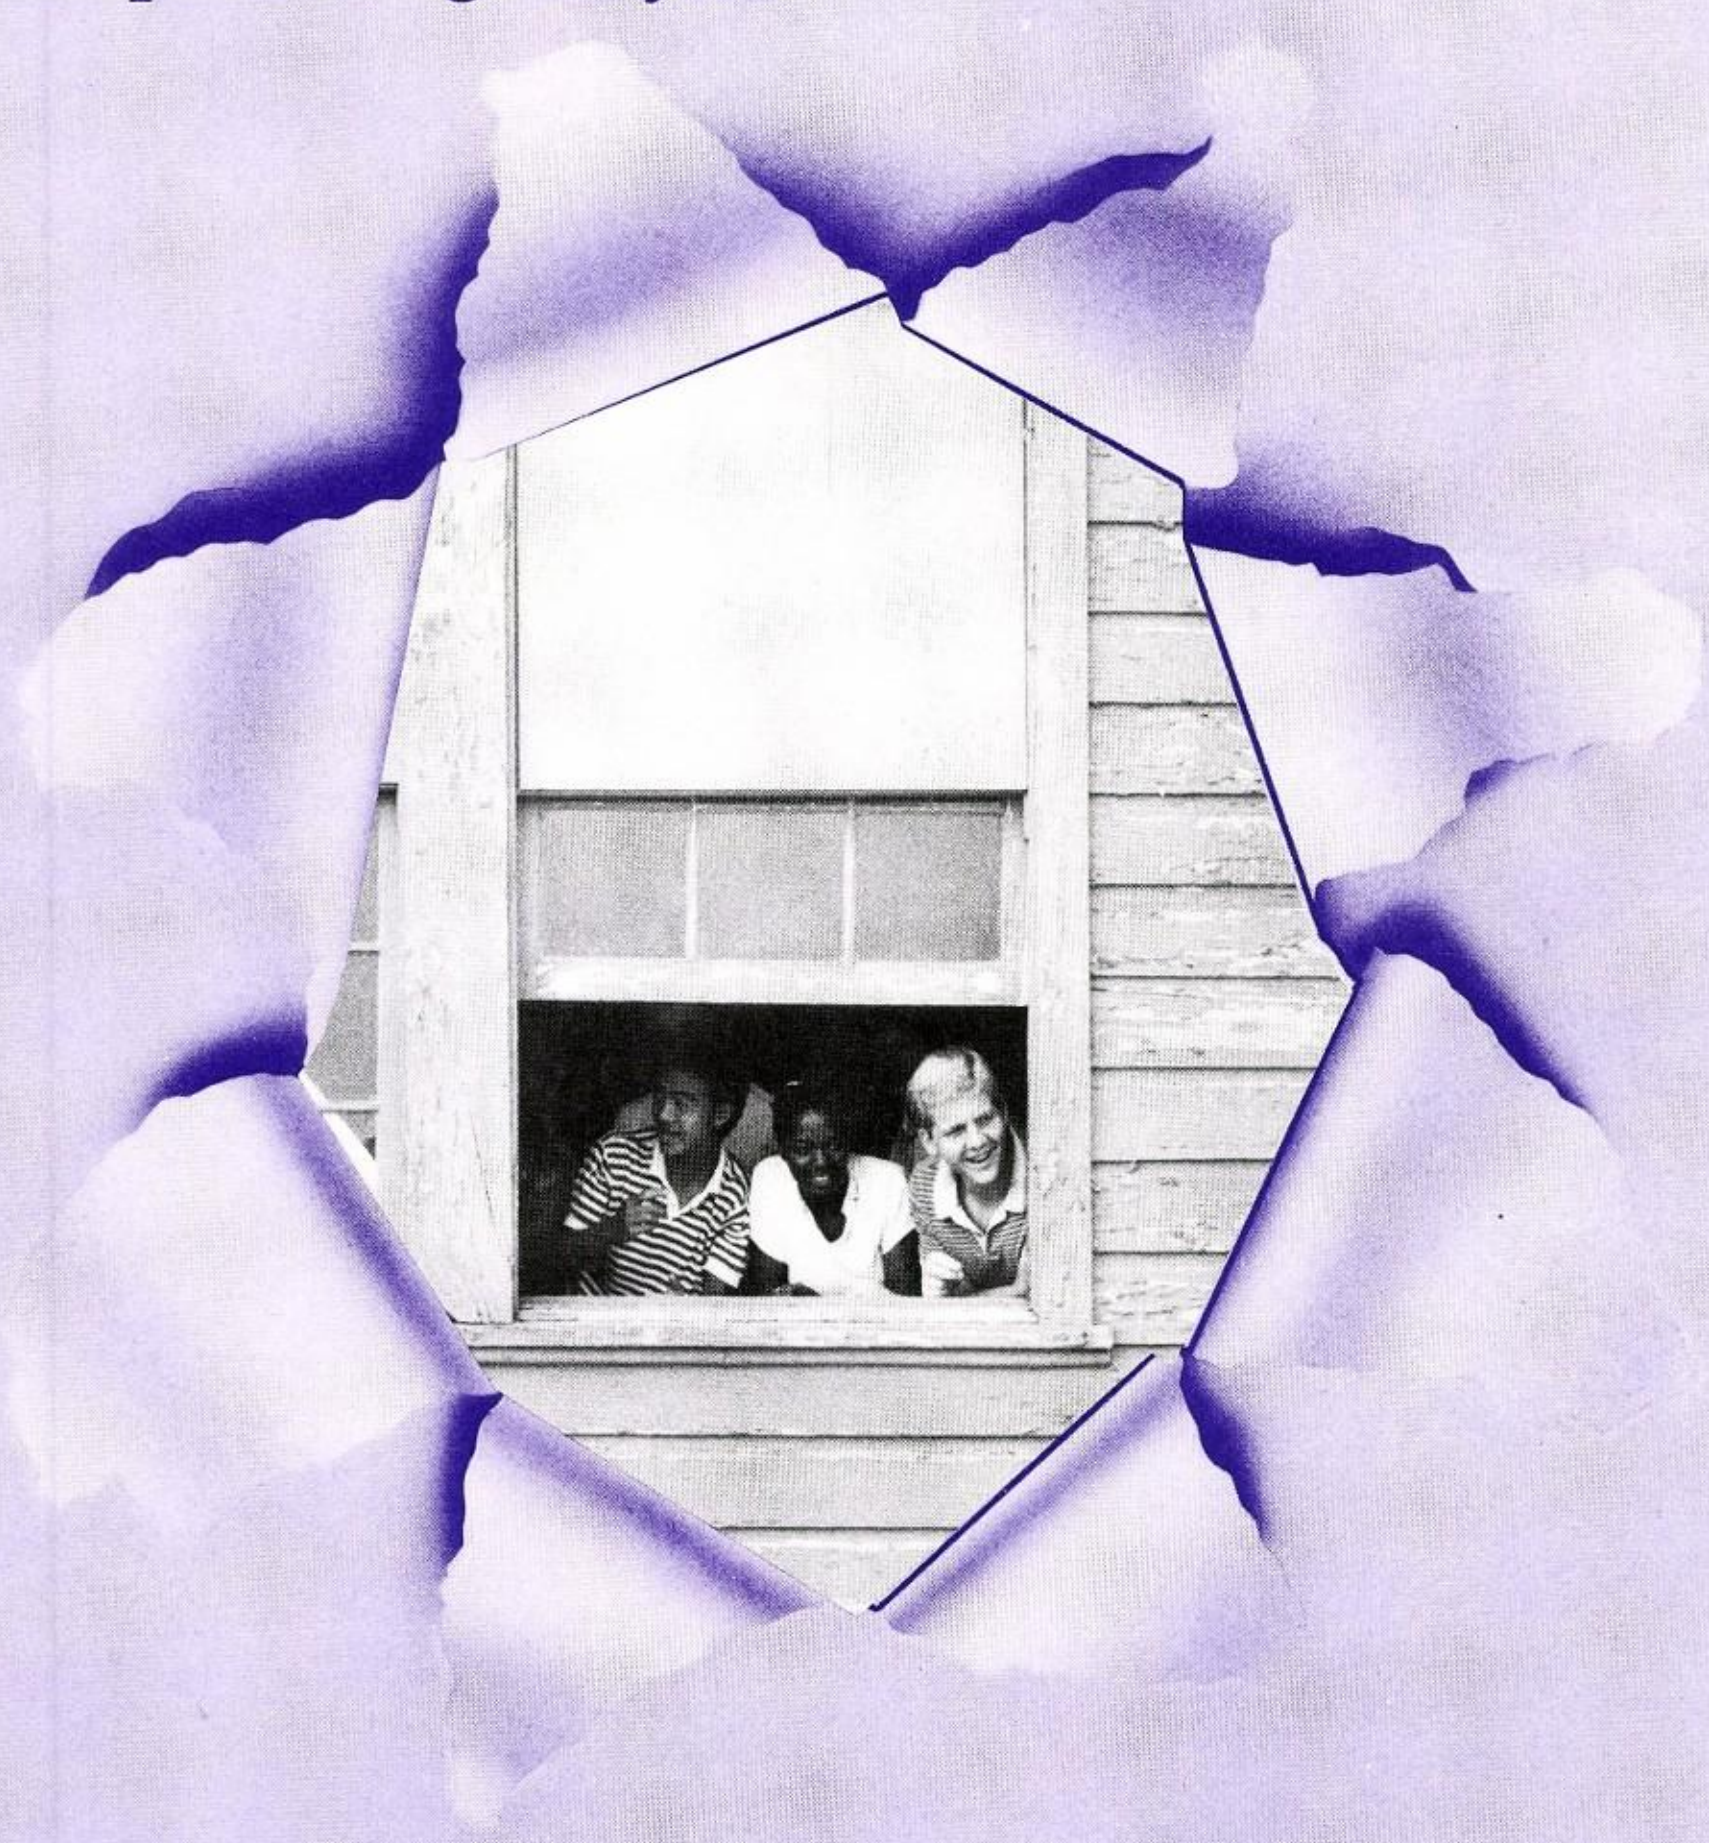
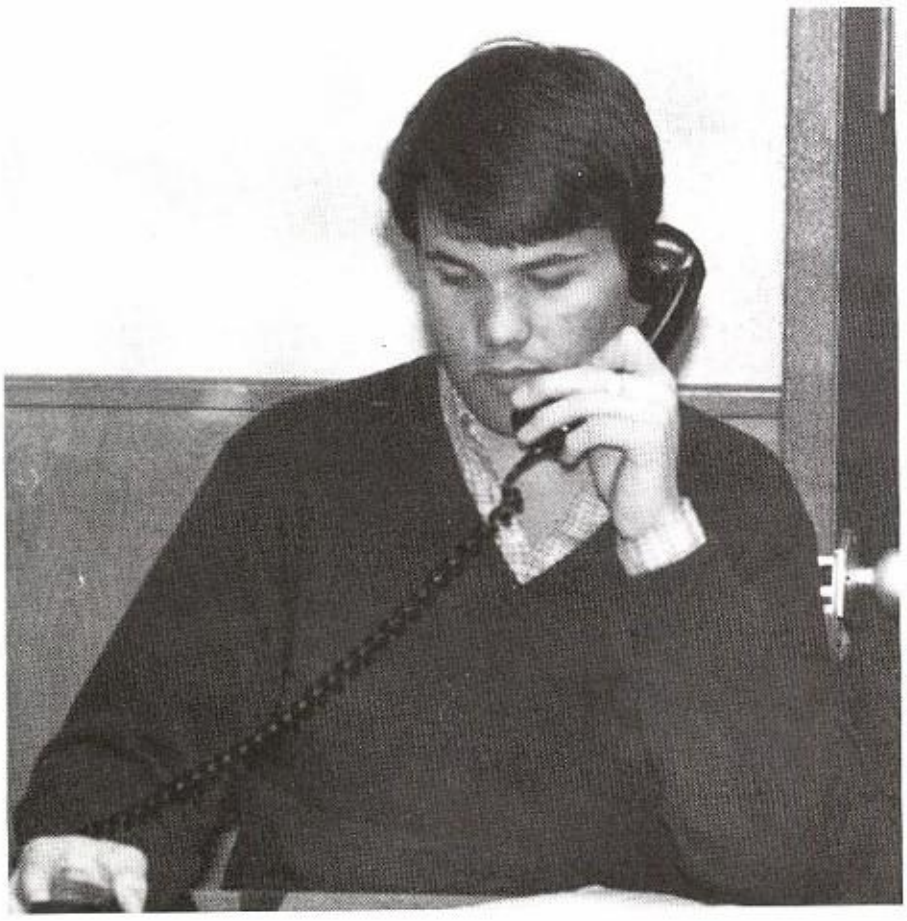
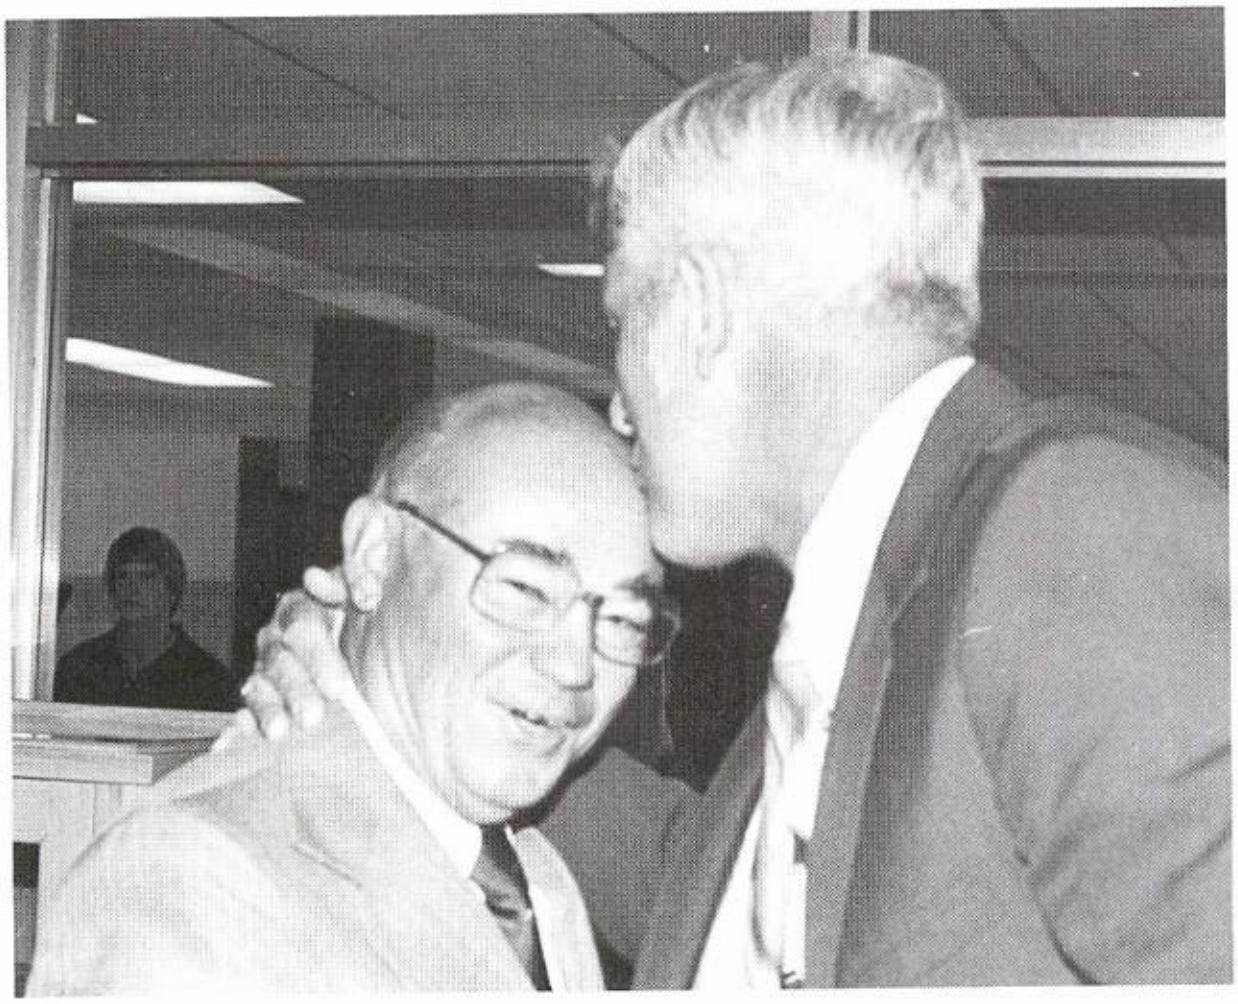
Glimpses of a great year

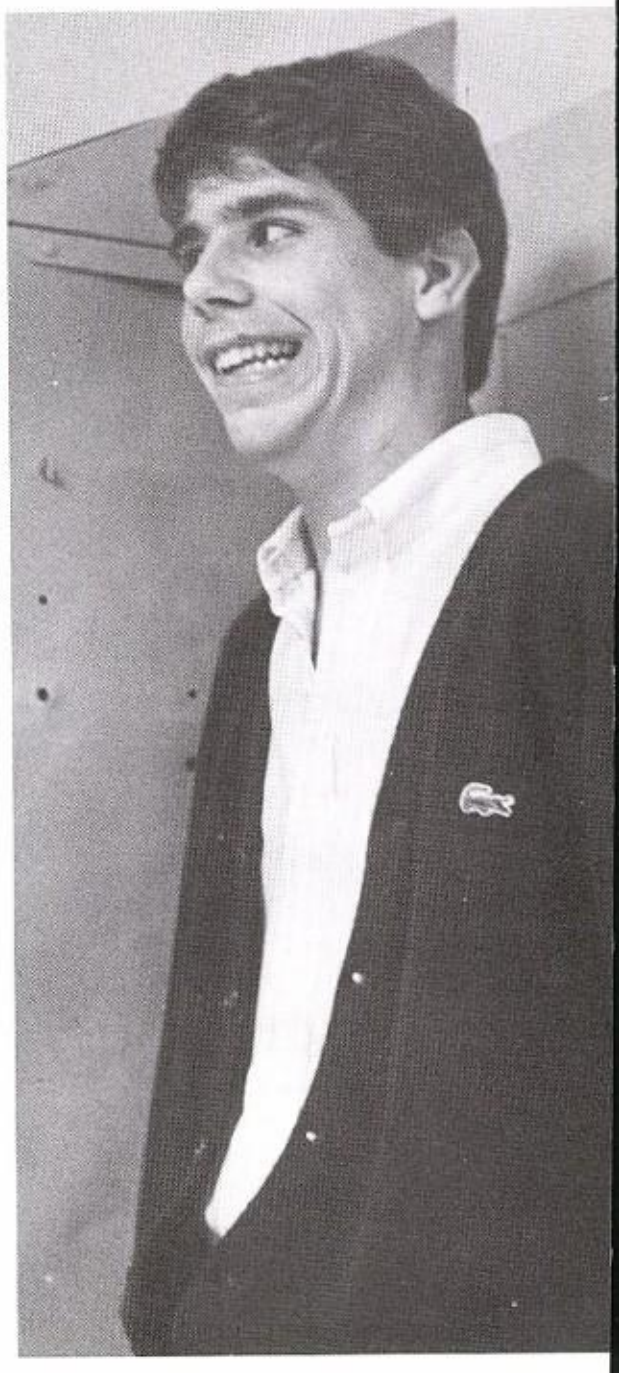


Students Duc Le, Jacqueline Hence, and Larry Bradley pose for a picture in Mrs. Cynthia Kanaga's art room.

Farewell: "Kiss the day goodbye"







Marty Major, principal for the day, assumes great responsibilities such as staple thumping and message taking.

Ruby Perkins laughs over a joke during P.E. class.

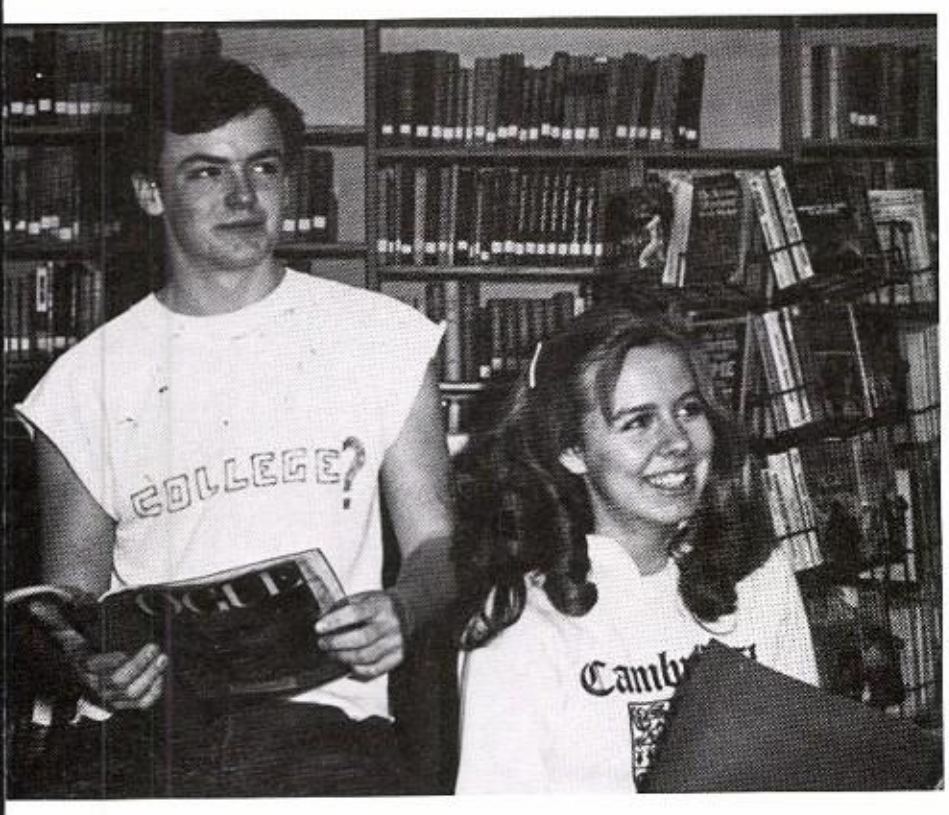
Former principal Ralph Miller gets a surprise smack from Herman Baldwin.

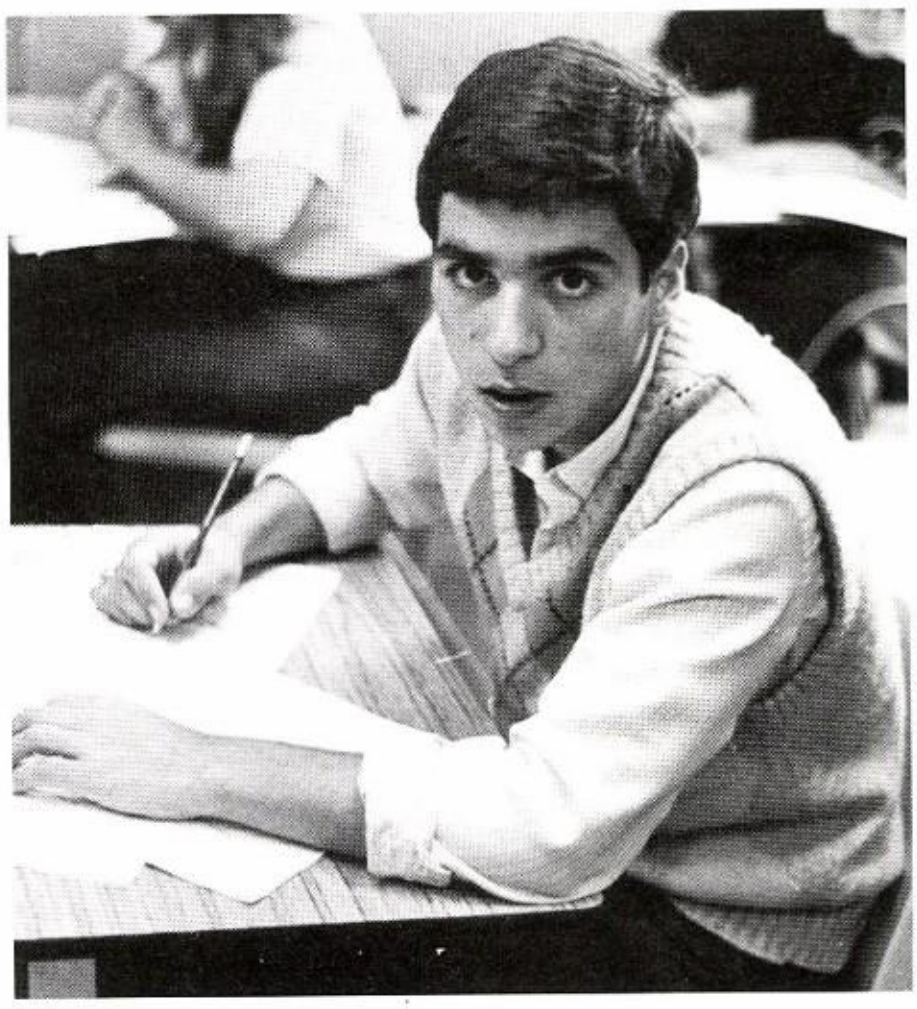
Where's Sam? Gary Cole hides behind lockers so Mr. Thornton can't see him.

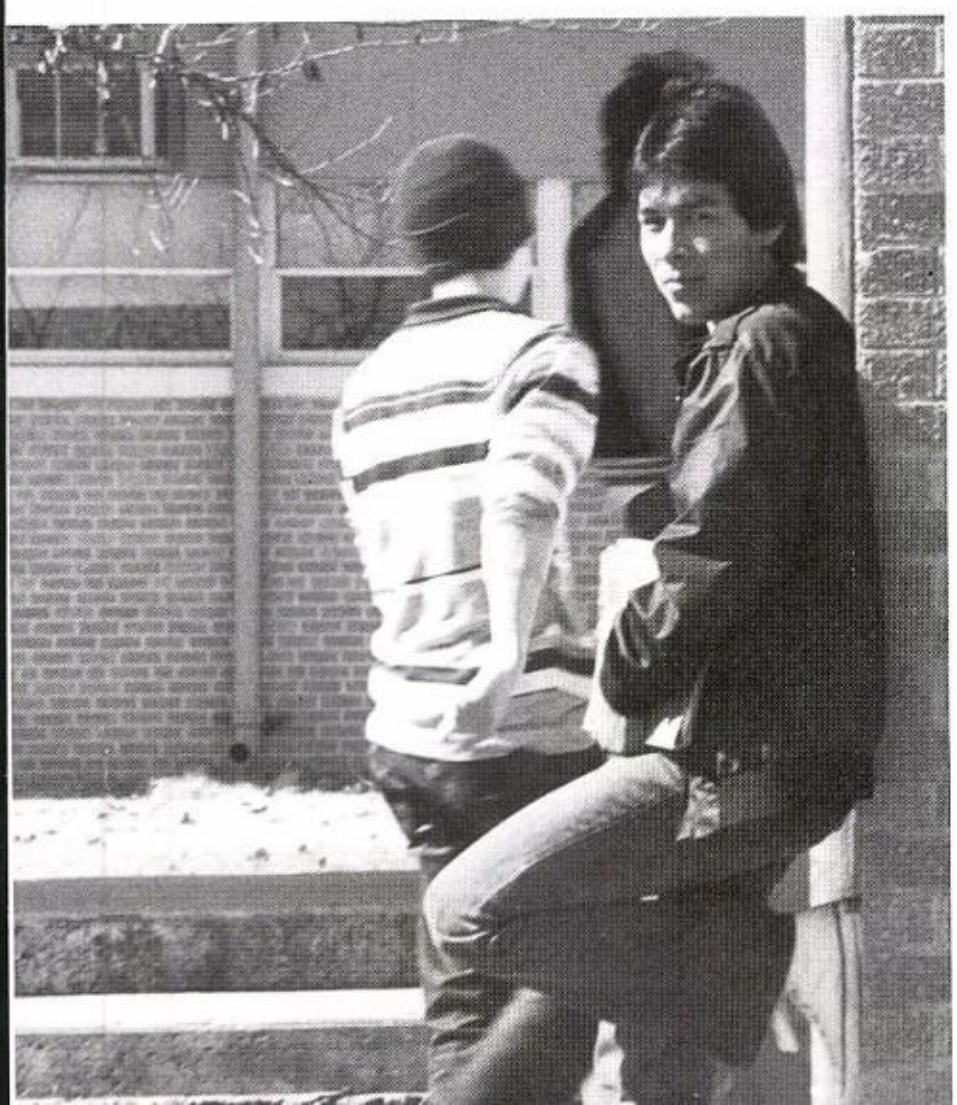
Kiss the day goodbye and point me toward tomorrow

The tomorrow that seemed so far away in 7th grade, in 10th grade, and even just last semester, is here now. While all our lives we desperately want to "Growup" and plead to be treated as adults, the first chance that comes, we invariably shy away from the unexpected responsibilities and decisions. Being afraid — and conquering that fear — is a first step in growing up.

But growing up too fast is an irrevocable mistake. Instead we should try to catch a glimpse of youth — of the night we beat Heights, of the endless parties and homecoming dances, of the friends we'll only remember by their senior pictures — before it's gone.





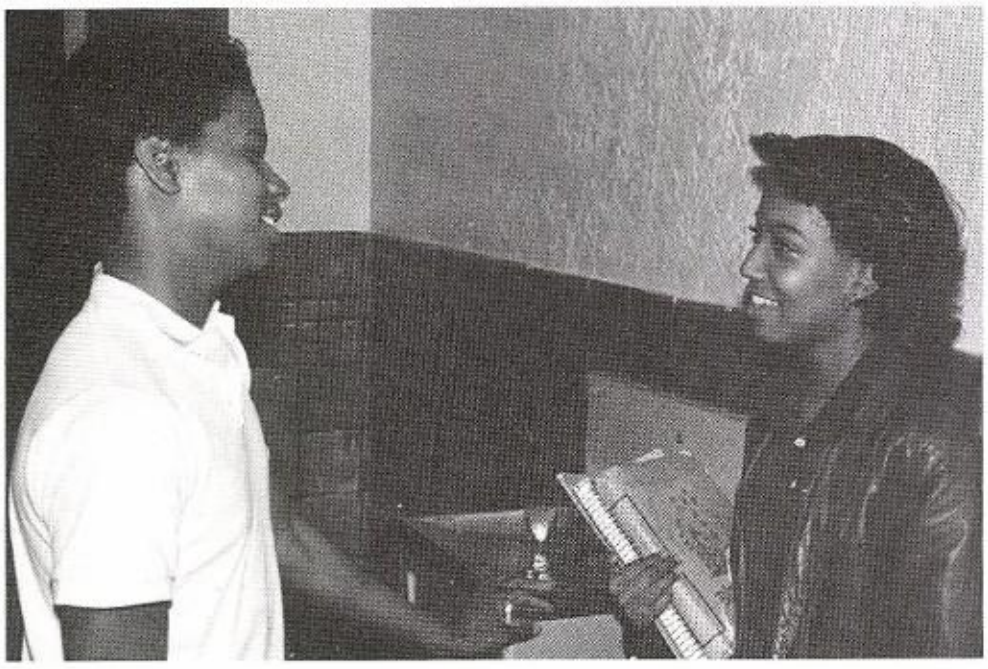


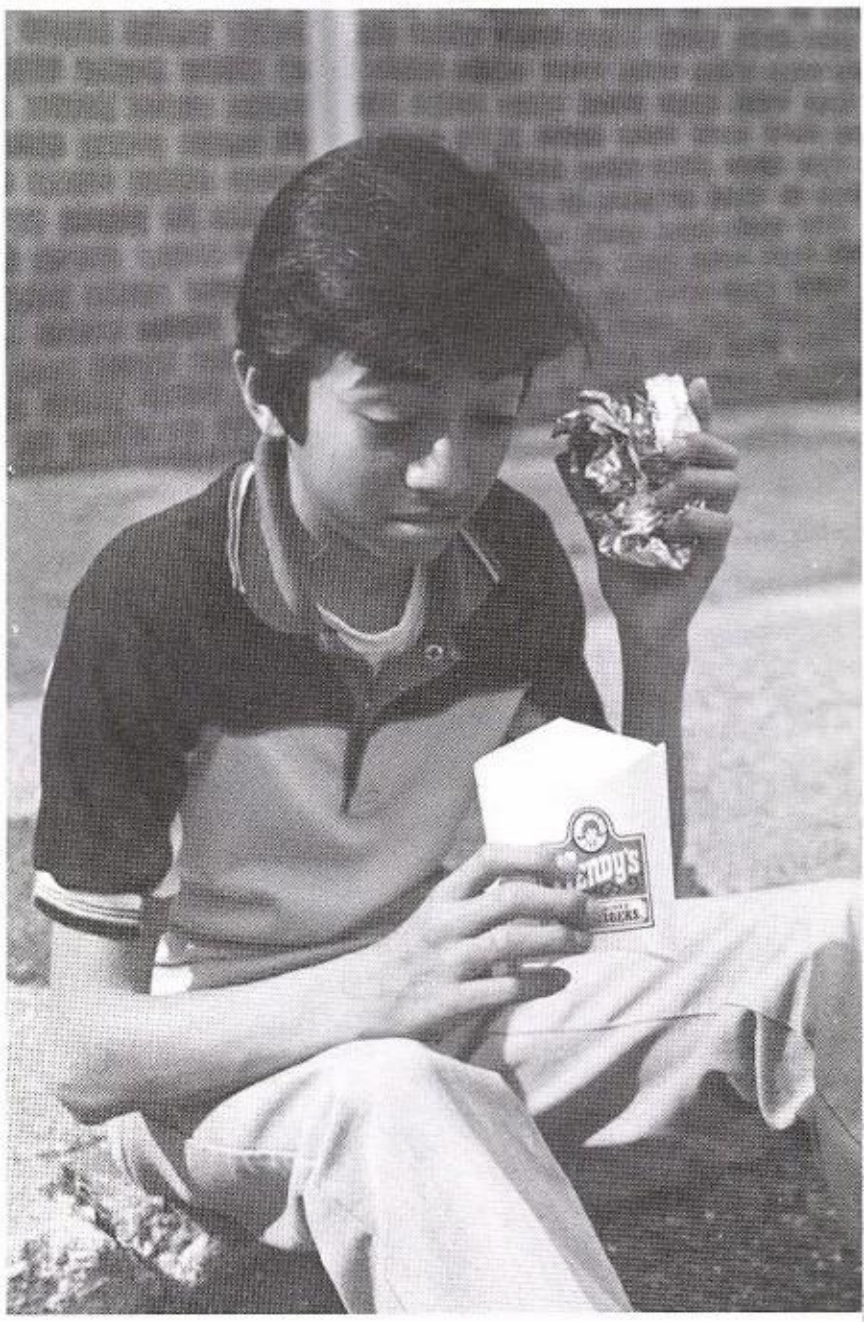
Mr. Sam Thornton, Paschal's first official crossing guard, makes Forest Park Blvd. a safe place for everyone.

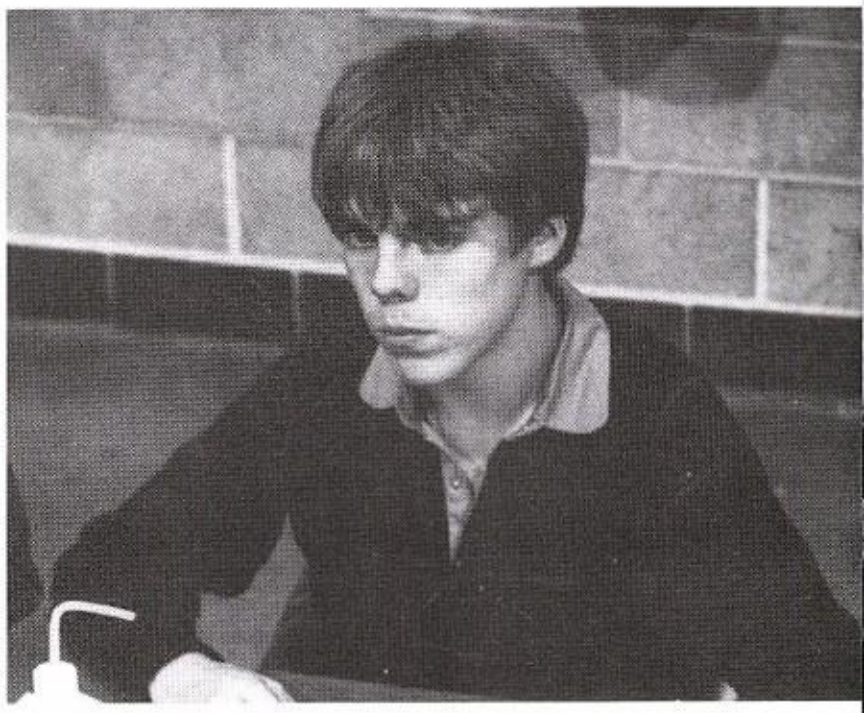
"Where are you going to college?" Charles King puts on his BMOC image to impress Nancy Mahlie.

"D'uh — What's going on?" John Mavias voices his profound thoughts about the complexities of the English language.

"Go ahead — make my day." Raul Vasquez plays Clint Eastwood during lunch.







Paschal Panthers are #1! Mrs. Linda Kay Black excitedly supports the football team.

Where's the beef? Luis Molina finishes a Wendy's hamburger.

Britt Allen and Michelle Jingles say their last goodbyes before going to first period.

Ken Neal worries over basketball team's points.

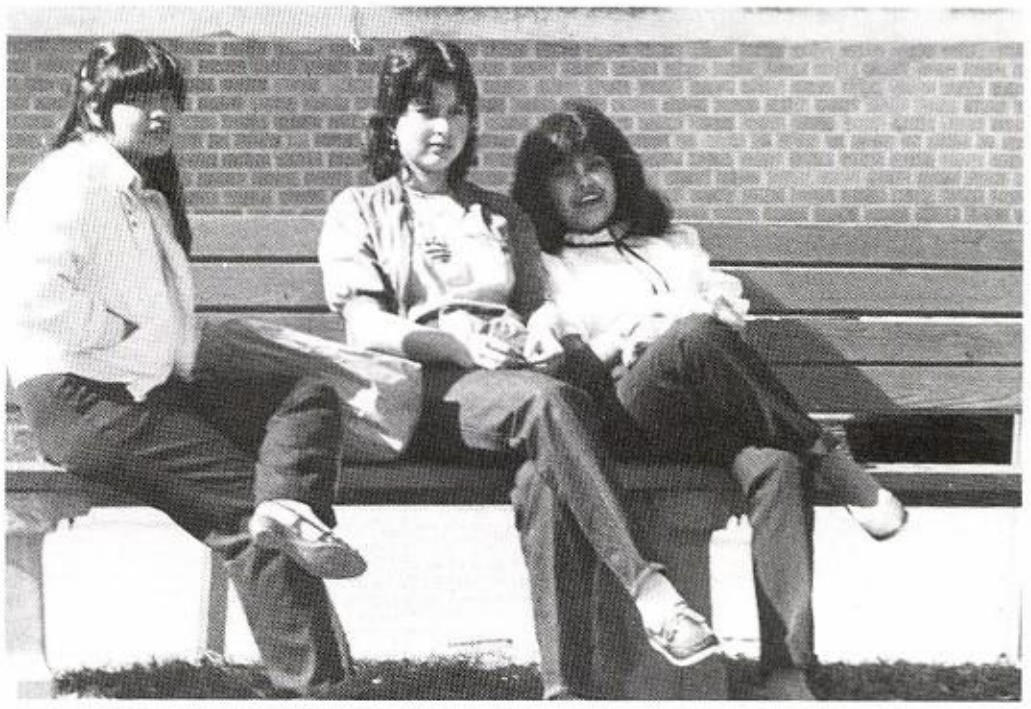
Ellen Garland shows us her best side.

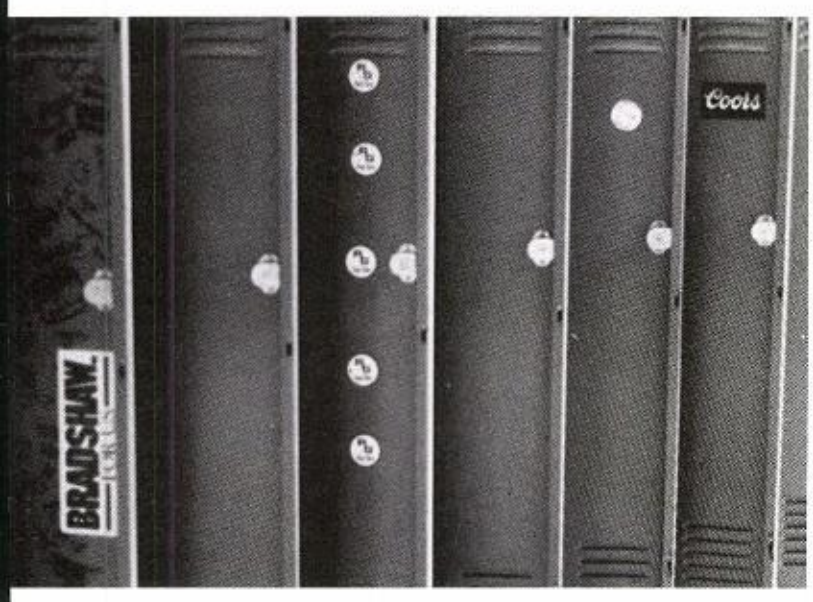
Memories: "The way we were"

Well, Paschal, this is it — the end of another yearbook. We've tried to capture the many phases and events of 1984. Of course, everyone and everything could not be pictured, but we do hope that these few memories will continue to be with you for the rest of your lives.

This year has been full of changes and surprises, including the color of this year's PANTHER! We had not only a new principal and many new teachers, but also different forms of academic programs for students. If it had not been for parent, faculty, and student involvement, the increase in spirit and participation would not have been possible.

Ten years from now, when you look through this yearbook, we hope you will remember the fun you had, the moments of togetherness, the honors and friendships.





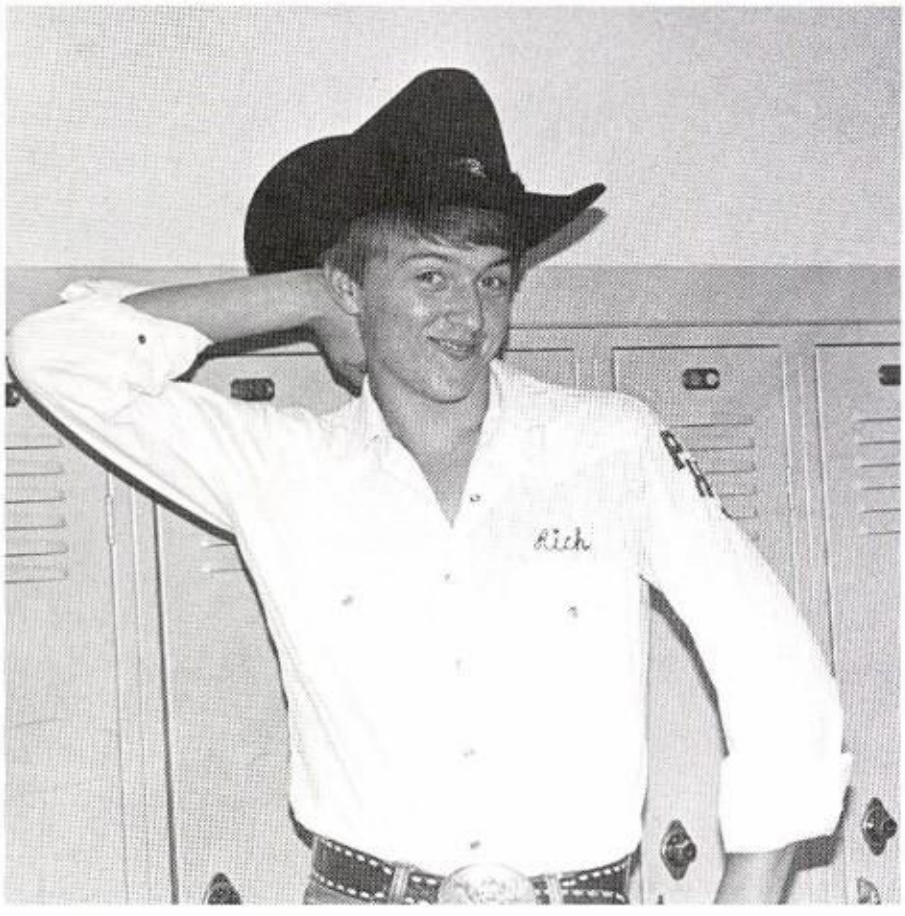
"Praise to thee, Paschal, Purple Reign!" The football team, cheerleaders, and fans finish the Alma Mater after the victorious game against Southwest.

Michelle Hall and Charles Braxton gossip outside the gym.

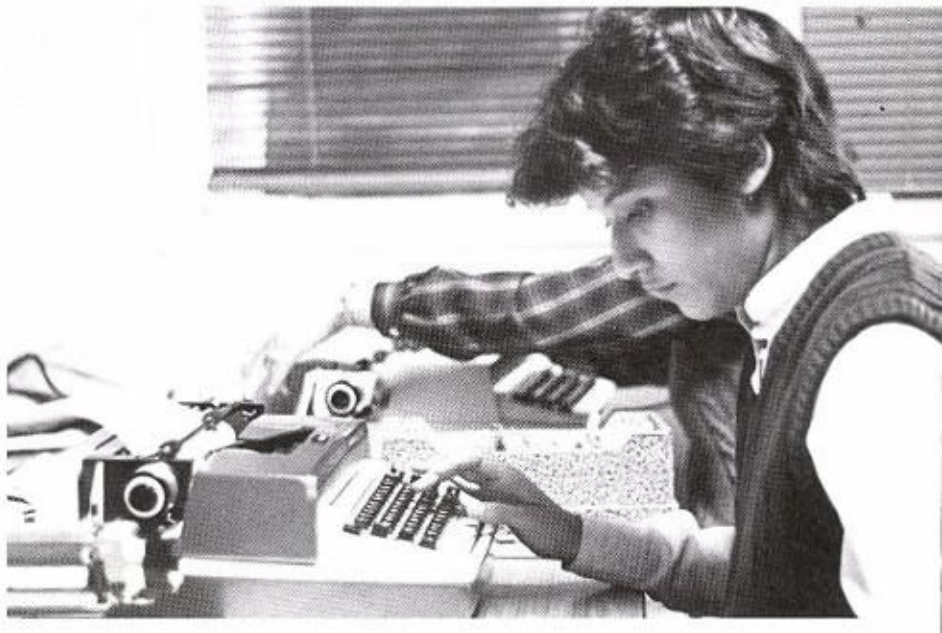
Berta Gutierrez, Alba Blanco, and Victoria Ibarra enjoy the fresh air during lunch.

Gaping locker doors reflect students' past.

PANTHER: "We work hard to make fun"



The most important part of annual staff is learning how to pose. Rich Frymire hams it up for the photographer.

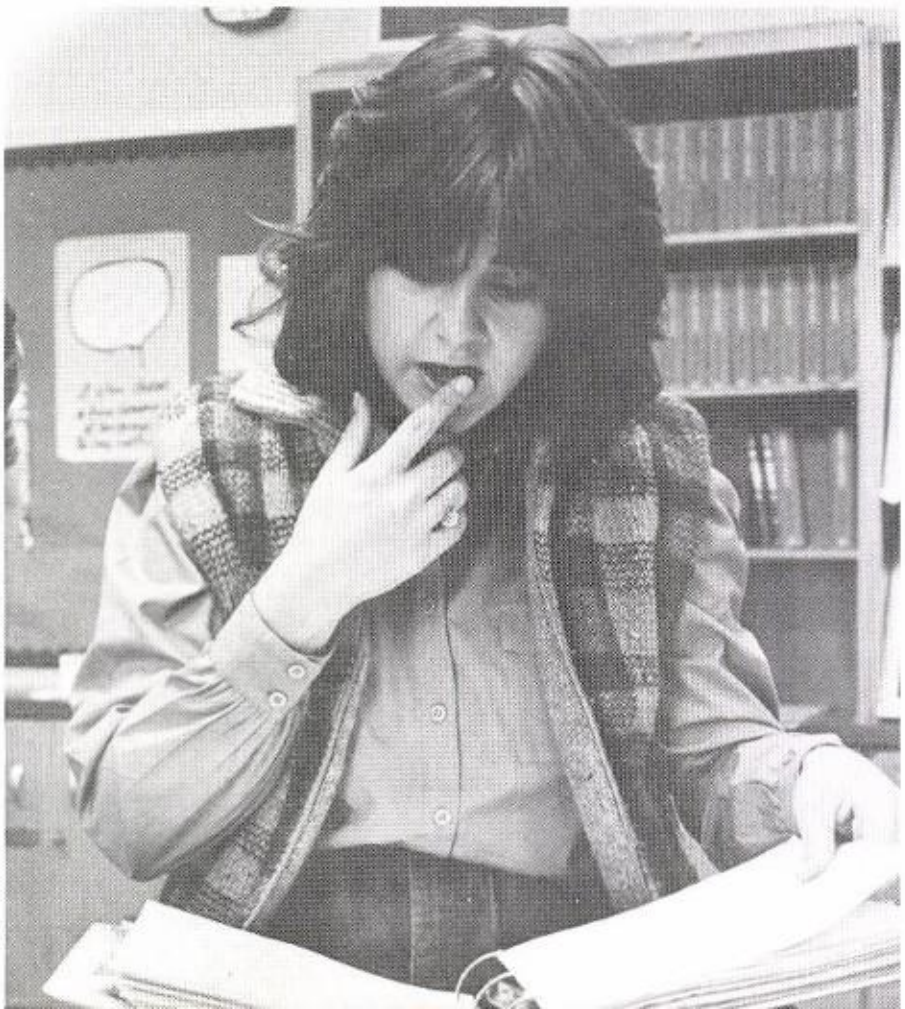


Felicia DeLaPaz sits at the typewriter for hours producing copy.

You're eating again? Melissa Cox indulges with another piece of cake at an annual party.

Diane Stanley liquid papers again to make a picture fit space on the layout.

Lick it or not, you have two more pages. Kim Gibson flips through the hours book during staff.



What? Our covers are lavender? Susan Williams participates in staff discussion.

Leslie Senevey colors posters during Sunday afternoon meeting to promote annual sales and slide show.

Lise Cooper works hard to put together a quad-pak for deadline.

Natalie Blinderman takes a break during the day after being kidnapped for Santa Pals earlier in the morning.

New staffers repeat the "Owah Tagoo Siam" chant and bow to senior staffers.

The chemicals in the dark room make me crazy! Joel Meadows dances with the broom in the dark room.

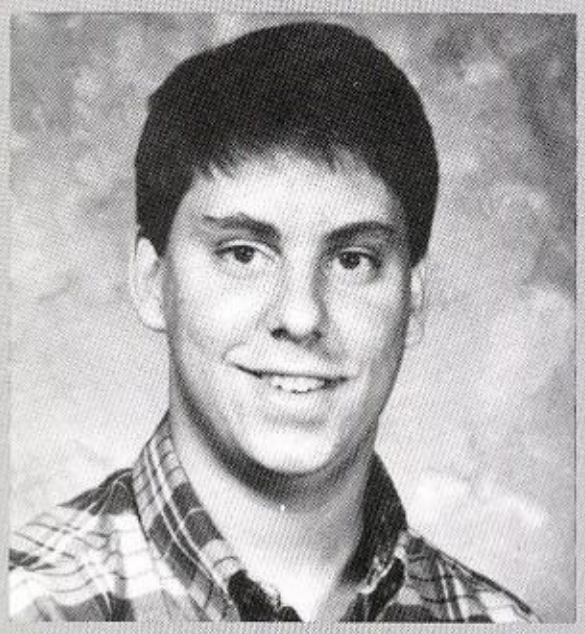
In Memoriam



Eric Short

We're going to miss you, our friend, for we knew you too long and we did too much together for us to ever forget you.

We learned to discover life together.

Dear Mark
You're not the sweetest guy around but you'll do. Good luck with the one in mind. Have fun
this summer but Please
Stay Out of Trouble!
Friends always

Mark!
It's been fun
this year being locker partners even though I'm messy and you're neat. Thanks for putting up with me. Have a great summer and day.

Mark,
It's been a hell of a time in World History. Ponder never knew what hit him. Maybe next year we could do it to someone else.
So see ya next year. your fellow classman,
John Johnson

Mark,
Well here we go again I hope that year I meet
be friends for a long time I see you always

To Mark,
Geometry was a trip with you and Jeff D. It was bearable with the laughs we had. Even if I made a low
C every time. It was nice.

you on the bus
Hope to see you later this year
Year. Hope to have classes with you
next year. With your friend,
Bill

Mark,
Mr. Macho Shithead. I'm glad you know your profanity. Maybe we'll have some classes or lunch together. I promise I'll take you to the lake sooner or later. Party Lord this summer.

Craig Zerucy

Mark you've been a head for most of the year. You need to chill out and be cool go out and party some and try to be a nice guy instead of the jerk you are. See you later. Bird

Jon Nudgley

P.S. Be careful in wood shop

Mark,
You're not the sweetest person at Paschal but you're in the top two. Take it easy.

Georgette

Mark it's been a real year good luck

Mark,
It's been real knowing you. Have a great summer. See ya next year.

Melissa Boggs

Mark,
I'm glad we've become such good friends this year and I hope we will stay friends in the years to come. I hope you have a terrific summer and a great future! Good luck!

Laurie

BEFORE

Mark,
You're not the greatest guy in Paschal but you're in the Top 2.05%
Stay cool you macho shithead.
Raymond

Mark,
This year sucked and you didn't help out at all. Maybe you will be in more of my classes next year
P.S. Don't get in any fights without me
